(I'm thinking Benicio Del Toro as Gene, with Salma Hayek and Lucy Liu! Are you listening, Hollywood?)

The book doesn't gloss over Simmons' tempestuous two-week liaison with Wilt Chamberlain, but Gene says it was born of "a failure of imagination as much as anything… we just kept running into each other." With the anticipated smash success of Lord of the Rings and the continuing boffo box-office for Harry Potter, adapting kid-lit blockbusters for the big screen is suddenly all the rage. So it's no surprise that Scholastic Books has inked a $1-billion deal with director/producer Ron Howard for a series of flicks based on books that are big with the schoolkids. Look for Howard's $275-million epic Captain Underpants — with Patrick Stewart in the title role — in late 2002, to be followed yearly by other kids' faves such as Germs, Germs, Germs; Heather Has Two Mommies; Taking My Medication is Fun; and Clifford the Big Red Dog Is Humping Your Leg and There's Not a Damn Thing You Can Do. Big Hollywood names are lining up to be involved; a showbiz insider has given me a copy of Ian McKellen's contract in which he agrees to play the role of "whatever, dear boy, whatever — when did you say that I get paid?"

Gene Rayburn wants you to know he likes girls — a lot. The former game show titan's autobiography, Match Games, is in stores now, and in it he spins wild tales of his failed efforts to sleep with 4,600 women. Among the thousands who've rejected Rayburn through the years: Cher, Diana Ross, Dionne Warwick, Phyllis Diller, Jo Anne Worley, Jessica Tandy, Shari Lewis, the cast of Golden Girls and Paul Lynde. Gene died in 1999. Guess you missed your big chance, ladies!

CanWest centralizing editorial policy

Letters

Editor, SEE:
An open letter by journalists at The Montreal Gazette

For two days last week, many reporters at The Gazette in Montreal removed their names from the articles they wrote. It was a protest against the decision by Southam News to force all of its 12 major metropolitan newspapers to run "national editorials" written at the Winnipeg corporate headquarters of parent company CanWest Global Communications Corp. The first was published last week. Another is to run Thursday.

We believe this is an attempt to centralize opinion to serve the corporate interests of CanWest. Far from offering additional content to Canadians, this will practically vacate the power of the editorial boards of Southam newspapers and thereby reduce the diversity of opinions and the breadth of debate that to date has been offered readers across Canada.

CanWest's intention is initially to publish one national editorial a week in all major Southam newspapers. This will eventually become three a week.

More important, each editorial will set the policy for that topic in such a way as to constrain the editorial boards of each newspaper to follow this policy. Essentially, CanWest will be imposing editorial policy on its papers on all issues of national significance. Without question, this decision will undermine the independence and diversity of each newspaper's editorial board and thereby give Canadians a greatly reduced variety of opinion, debate and editorial discussion.

Editorial boards at each newspaper exist to debate public policy issues, reach a consensus and then present the reasoning to the public. They are designed to be largely free of corporate interests. This crucial process of journalistic debate is undermined by editorials dictated by corporate headquarters.

We believe this centralizing process will weaken the credibility of every Southam paper. Last week's first editorial, for example, calls on the federal government to reduce and eventually to abolish capital-gains taxes for private foundations. Who would blame a reader for thinking the editorial simply serves the interests of the foundation run by the Asper family, owners of CanWest and Southam? Credibility is the most precious asset a newspaper possesses. When the power of the press is abused, that credibility dies.

Journalists have a duty to be faithful to the interests of their readers. Our responsibility is to seek the truth and encourage freewheeling debate on a full range of issues and present stories and ideas in as dynamic a way as possible. Blatant pressures applied to editors by CanWest have damaged this process at major newspapers across Canada. The company is narrowing debate and corrupting both news coverage and commentary to suit corporate interests.

A free press is no longer free when competing voices disappear, yet the federal government has recently permitted two large corporations, CanWest and BCE Inc., to secure a stranglehold on Canada's major privately operated television and newspaper outlets. It is time for a thorough inquiry into this dangerous situation.

Protesters give glimpse of future

Mike Hudema is right. The demonstrators who took ove Anne McLellan's constituen office over the weekend to protest the government's ant terrorism measures can claim moral victory over a govern ment more concerned with addressing perception than r ity.

Of the several dozen protes ers who came and went over four days of the occupation, spent Monday night in the Edmonton Police Services' bu ets and will be back in court month to answer to charges trespassing. One report sugg ed that Anne McLellan's staff feared for their safety, which (whether reported accurately not) is categorically nonsens

The plain and simple truth the scruffy bunch squatting in Minister McLellan's office we an embarrassment and an inc venience. They were an incon nience for the staff there, but more importantly they were embarrassment to the ministe The protesters were making national headlines and McLellan's strategy of preten ing they didn't exist was no longer working.

So instead, a situation was manufactured in which they were asked to leave and anyo who refused was carried awa to waiting police vans. Despi the fact that the police them selves say everything was pe ful and orderly, McLellan's o cials hinted that the protester were at best misguided naïfs and at worst opportunistic m contents.

But in the end, by sticking t their principles and getting arrested, the demonstrators g us a clear indication of just ho draconian McLellan and her government will be with "litt people" who disagree with them.

Free for whom?

How we're paying for free trade

NAOMI KLEIN

Last weekend, while crossing the border back to Ontario from Buffalo, our car was stopped by a customs officer. "What were you guys doing in the States?" he asked. "Do any shopping?"

"Okay, have a great day."

Nothing strange here, except for one detail: this man had a U.S. flag on his sleeve. He stopped every car before waving them on to Canadian border guards who repeated the process all over again. It felt like a glimpse into Fortress North America, a not-so-distant future in which U.S. security officers are the gatekeepers not just of the U.S. border but of the entire continent.

As Monday's budget shows, Canadians are being asked to give up more than border control. We are also being asked to hand over a chunk of the economic dividends of years of economic austerity. Finance Minister Paul Martin's "security budget" throws $1.2 billions directly at the border. Some of it is designed to protect Canadians from terrorists, but much of it must be seen for what it is: a new public subsidy for multinational corporations.

When Canadians patiently accepted cutbacks to health care, unemployment insurance, and many other social programs, we were told that all this austerity was necessary to attract foreign investors. We weren't trading our social programs in exchange for free trade, the boosters said — on the contrary, only free trade would generate the kind of prosperity needed to rebuild our social programs. Only there's a hitch. Just as Canadians were starting to imagine spending some of our recent national prosperity on new programs it now turns out that the budget surplus will not be used to make people more secure. It will to be used to make trade more secure, to "keep our borders open," as Mr. Martin said on Monday.

The proceeds of cross-border trade are going back into the border itself: to make it a terrorist-fighting and free-trade flowing super-border. We are going to have "the most modern border in the world," Mr. Martin enthused. This, it turns out, is the legacy of all the years of belt-tightening: not a better society, but a really great border.

Let's pause for the irony. Free trade was supposed to lower the costs of moving goods across borders, thereby encouraging new investment. Now we have become so dependent on trade (and the U.S. has become so mistrustful of our ability to police ourselves), that we are spending hundreds of millions of new dollars just to keeping the trade flowing.

Put another way, costs that used to be absorbed by the private sector in the form of export and import duties and tariffs have been transferred onto taxpayers in the form of security costs. The border, the promise of so much prosperity, is turning into an economic sinkhole.

Are the new security costs an unavoidable price to pay for our economic stability? Perhaps. But they should at least send a cautionary message to our politicians who are pushing to expand the North American free trade agreement into the entire hemisphere. Free trade has already taken a severe toll on our social programs and our ability to make sovereign immigration and refugee policy. It is now costing us billions in security dollars. Can we at least stop calling it "free?"

Moral victory

Arrested protesters get their message out

by Andrew HANON

Oh, the irony of watching the police haul away protesters demonstrating their fear that Canada's new anti-terrorism legislation will erode our right to dissent.

A few dozen members of various groups, ranging from the Council of Canadians to the University Coalition Against War and Racism, occupied Federal Justice Minister Anne McLellan's office after they were told they couldn't meet with her until February to voice their fears about the proposed anti-terrorism legislation. On Monday, 13 were forcibly removed by police and charged with trespassing. They will appear before a judge in early January.

There were three bills the protesters were concerned about: McLellan's own Bill C-36, Bill C-35 and Bill C-42, which in combination, they argued, could be used to criminalize nearly all forms of public dissent. Bill C-36 is before the Senate and is expected to be approved within the next few days.

The protesters walked into McLellan's 107 Avenue office on Friday morning, past the public reception area and into her staff's working space, which is off-limits to the public in order to keep secure the rows and rows of cabinets full of confidential files. Staff, some of whom were bemused by the motley collection of demonstrators while others clearly seethed over their impertinence, called the police. Senior EPS officials were dispatched to negotiate with the occupiers, trying to draw the line between legitimate public demonstration and obstruction of the public's business. A compromise was reached: certain parts of the office would remain off-limits, but others — notably the washroom — were fair game. Once the office closed for the weekend, the demonstrators would move back into the reception area.

As the clock ticked away over the weekend, the protesters received a steady stream of support and encouragement from locals and activists around the world. Fiona Cavanagh, one of the 13 hauled off by police, said they received 400 e-mails and more than 150 phone calls during the occupation. Some people dropped off food, while an organized labour group raised $500 from its members. On Saturday a portable hot tub was rented for the chilled demonstrators, who complained that the heat was turned off overnight and replaced with air conditioning. At one point, they staged a mock coup and hauled all the reception area's furniture outside, declaring McLellan had been evicted by the people.

On Monday the staff asked them to leave and when some refused, police were called.

Farah Mohamed, McLellan's communications director in Ottawa and the only staffer allowed to speak publicly, said the weekend occupation had left the carpet and walls damaged and that the protesters were interfering with the "legitimate use of the office."

Mohamed said the protesters were misguided by fears that the anti-terrorism measures will pave the way for a crackdown on legitimate dissent. "The bill has been amended to ensure that it only targets terrorists," she said.

Mike Hudema, one of the sit-in's organizers, declared a moral victory. They were able to draw international attention to the issue. The protesters will now regroup and make plans for trying to pressure the government into killing Bills C-35 and C-42.

Move over, Village Voice. Stay clear, Bay Guardian. Hit the road, Georgia Straight. And as for TEE Magazine and Vue Weekly, the jig is up. Might as well fold our tents right now. The Edmonton Journal, which as you well know has always been the vanguard of what's hip and cutting edge in the city, has launched its own urban weekly.

Say hello to Ed.

Ed, as its name implies, will soon be the Bible of style, the Koran of cool, the Talmud of hip. The inaugural issue was inserted in last Saturday's Journal, and it carried insightful commentary on how our bus system sucks, an unprecedented examination of mullets, a street survey on whether people think cats are better than dogs, and a profile of a young, really dumb divorced couple who don't care if the whole city knows it.

Ed editor Kerry Powell promised to put Ed writers' faces on Global TV and on CanWest Global's Web site. We know CanWest, which owns the Journal and Global, holds up Edmonton as a shining example of media "convergence" (which in layman's terms means recycling the same content in print and on TV), so we can't help but wonder if Southam newspapers in other cities are planning similar product launches. Think of the names: The Times-Colonist could call its hipster weekly Vic, the Herald's would be Cal, the Leader-Post's, Reg. But just in case someone clues into the fact that Ed really isn't a cool name, here are a few suggestions the Journal brass are sure to find hip, happening and right with the times:

- The Groove.
- Daddy-o.
- Cool Cats' Home Journal.
- Malaise.
- Stupor.
- Huh?
- Why not?
- Dunno.
- Waste of Trees and Ink.

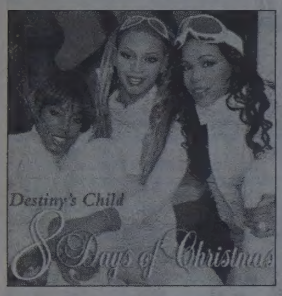
Deck the Halls

with Vinnie Zummo and other festive faves

There are two kinds of people in this world. Those who love Christmas music, those who don't. Fortunately for those of us who do, the market is gargantuan. Record store racks are decked with a spate of 2001 seasonal releases.

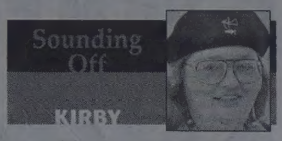


■ DESTINY'S CHILD
■ 8 Days of Christmas

This bevy of buxom beauties should stick to booty-shakin', cuz I don' think they're ready for this genre. What is it with these women who can't just sing a song the way it was meant to be sung without those annoying vocal-acrobatics that constantly embellish to the point of listener exasperation? This trio of Texan tarts takes on Yuletide classics like White Christmas, Silent Night and Little Drummer Boy, proving that 15 million fans can be wrong. Apparently no one in the entourage was clever enough to come up another four days in the title track, their takeoff of The 12 Days Of Christmas. "On the eighth day of Christmas, my baby gave to me a pair of Chloe shades and a diamond belly ring." Real music aficionados will recoil in horror, feminists will skip the holly and ivy and go straight for the tar and feathers, yet the 12–15 year old North American girls should be good for a few hundred thousand units.

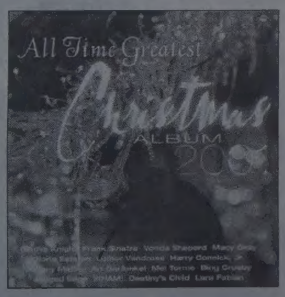
■ CHANTICLEER WITH DAWN UPSHAW
■ Christmas with Chanticleer

Chanticleer are a Bay area male vocal ensemble that went the right way in bringing in a female soprano vocalist to guest on these Christmas classics. This album is very natural sounding, with 12 pure singers who have remarkable accuracy of intonation, performing traditional arrangements. If your family has formal festive functions, this one's for you.



■ HOLLY COLE
■ Baby, It's Cold Outside

If this is the Cole you get in your stocking this year, baby, it'll be warm inside. Canadian chanteuse Cole is a cabaret crooner extraordinaire on this Christmas fare. Her skillfully interpretive presentation of the lyrics is exquisite, well-punctuated by the strings, horns and percussion of the backing orchestra. All this and the pristine production make for a glorious festive release; it's Cole's expressive delivery that takes it over the top.



■ VARIOUS ARTISTS
■ All Time Greatest Christmas Album 2001

A big Christmas bonus should go to the Sony employee in charge of song selection for this year's various artist Christmas compilation. Labels get mileage this time of year from seasonal back catalogue selections, and this one's a winner, from Mel Torme doing The Christmas Song to Jingle Bells by Gladys Knight, Macy Gray on Winter Wonderland, to Johnny Mathis, to Wham! to Bing Crosby and Luther Vandross — we even forgive the inclusion of Destiny's Child. And tossing in some trash will appease teenagers when you need to go cross-generational in your crucial Dec. 25 programming selections.

■ SONS OF MAXWELL
■ Instant Christmas

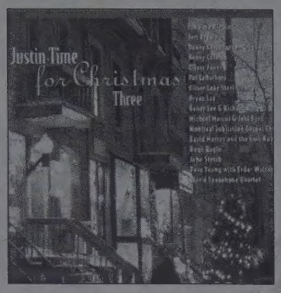
Maxwell and Instant must be some clever coffee reference. The sons are the Carroll brothers from Nova Scotia, and they do have that superb sound-of-siblings-singing thing on the go. The tunes are a mix of traditionals such as O Holy Night and I Saw Three Ships and Celtic and Irish festive sings, and the delivery is all of the latter vein. You must be a hard core, jump-up-and-down bohdran-lovin' fan to want this one.

■ B.B. KING
■ A Christmas Celebration Of Hope

The man must be Santa Claus himself, because this album just oozes character. From festive blues-rock standards such as Please Come Home For Christmas, Merry Christmas, Baby and even I'll Be Home for Christmas to instrumental originals to Blues Decorations and Backdoor Santa, his rich, deep vocals wrap themselves around the songs as well as his beautiful trademark liquid guitar tones do. B. B.'s warm and engaging personality lights up every song. Not just for blues fans, this one will make everyone's Christmas merrier and their record collection better. An outstanding album.

■ KARL ROTH
■ Have Yourself a Merry Little Christmas

Calgarian violinist Karl Roth does as fine a job of selecting seasonal standards as he does selecting talent on this festive gem. His playing can at times be reminiscent of Papa John Creach or Stephane Grappelli, and monster acoustic guitarist Dave Hamilton conjures up visions of Joe Pass' fingers dancing in your head. Sparse arrangements and simple production make for an enjoyable MOR Christmas album, with a broad enough appeal for a mixed bag of guests.



■ VARIOUS ARTISTS
■ Justin Time For Christmas III

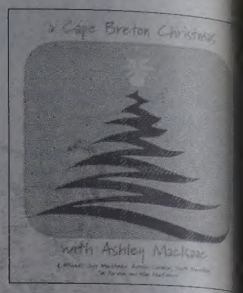
Jazz label Justin Time's third Christmas album is a beautiful compilation of Yuletide favorites performed in various jazz styles. From Silent Night to Let It Snow to The Christmas Song to Santa Baby to It Came Upon A Midnight Clear, each song is well played and well arranged, and the 16 different artists give it a fresh sound. A must for jazz fans, plus an appropriate Christmas dinner selection; you could also use this to impress your snotty friends and co-workers with your sophisticated taste.

■ TONI BRAXTON
■ Snowflakes

R&B diva Toni Braxton's first holiday album is a real "'tis the season to be sexy" release. Not your regular Christmas CD, this one has two standards — Have Yourself a Merry Little Christmas and The Christmas Song — plus Vince Guaraldi's Christmas Time Is Here, made famous by Charlie Brown, and six originals and co-writes. The duet with Shaggy on Christmas in Jamaica is entertaining, Holiday Celebrate is kind of catchy, but the other songs fall short of the mark. Braxton's laid-back sultriness and hushed tone will make this a good Christmas make-out album for young lovers and contemporary music fans; but it's a weak contender in this year's pack.

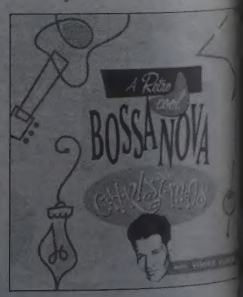
■ TERRY MCDADE WITH THE MCDADES
■ Midwinter

One of the best albums this season is a local offering that has Christmas songs from around the world. Terry McDade on harp, guitar and lute, Jeremiah singing and playing sax and whistles, Solon on upright bass and Shannon Johnson on violin have put out a beautiful collection of carols. It's an inspired album that is imbued with the warm spirit and gracious heart that is this family



■ ASHLEY MACISSAC
■ A Cape Breton Christmas

Knowing how self-aggrandizing and obnoxious Ashley MacIssac can be, one fears his fiddling around with Christmas tunes. We know nothing is sacred to MacIssac — you don't know whether to expect Silver Bells or golden showers. How easy it is to be cynical, reading liner notes that have him thanking Mom and Dad while the first song tells of the night before Christmas at Ashley's house. Astonishingly, upon listening you find a great CD on your hands. Who feels it knows it, and he couldn't play these songs like this and not have real passion for this music. Even if you are not a fan of the man or the Celtic genre, this is such a likable album, and a great mix of Yuletide fare. It's a stellar album, good for any holiday collection.



■ VINNIE ZUMMO
■ A Retro Cool Bossa Nova Christmas

Yeah, baby! It's Christmas Eve, you mix the cranberry martinis and I'll throw on Vinnie's version of Jingle Bells. This cat can play, and his guitar-based album is slick, sophisticated and smooth. The arrangements are dictated by that brushes-on-snare-lounge sound, but the jazzy guitar plays the melodies true so that everyone can instantly recognize the holiday hits.

Sublime beauty in the midst of Kaos

by Gary McGOWAN

FAQ
FREQUENTY ASKED QUESTIONS

NAME: Jack Semple

KNOWN FOR: "I like to call myself a 'blues fusion' guitar player because what I do is such a hybrid of R&B, blues and jazz."

NEXT GIG: Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Dec. 13, 14 and 15 at the Sidetrack Cafe (10333 - 112th St.) to celebrate the release of the new CD Jack Semple Band Live At Kaos.

WHY A LIVE CD: Originally, CBC approached me about recording a show to be used on Holger Peterson's Saturday Night Blues show. We decided to do it at Kaos which is an intimate little club in Calgary. It came out really well. People have always told me they like my live thing better than anything I've ever done in the studio. You have less control over the situation, but I think there's always a higher level of intensity. CBC has a lease-back arrangement that allows for the release of recordings like this, so I decided to put it out.

ORGAN PLAYER DOUG RILEY: We are blessed to have him in our band because he doesn't have to play gigs like this. He, of course, led Dr. Music in the 1970's. Nowadays he does a lot of scoring and arrangement work for orchestras, he plays his own jazz gigs and he's Anne Murray's musical director. He tells me our shows are the most fun he has with music, so I guess that's why he's willing to come all the way from Toronto to do them. What? He also played the piano part on Bob Seger's Night Moves. I didn't know that. I'll have to ask him about that story.

FAVOURITE COLOUR: I've got some new T-shirts for this tour. They're purple. I looked around and I noticed every tour T-shirt out there seems to be black, which is the colour of death. So, I decided I wanted mine to be purple which is the colour of life.

BEST PARTY: My 40th birthday party. There's a songwriting centre here in Regina which my wife rented to hold the party. She invited all my friends and we had a giant jam that lasted until 5 a.m.

FAVOURITE TV SHOW: The Simpsons. It's a funny, funny show.

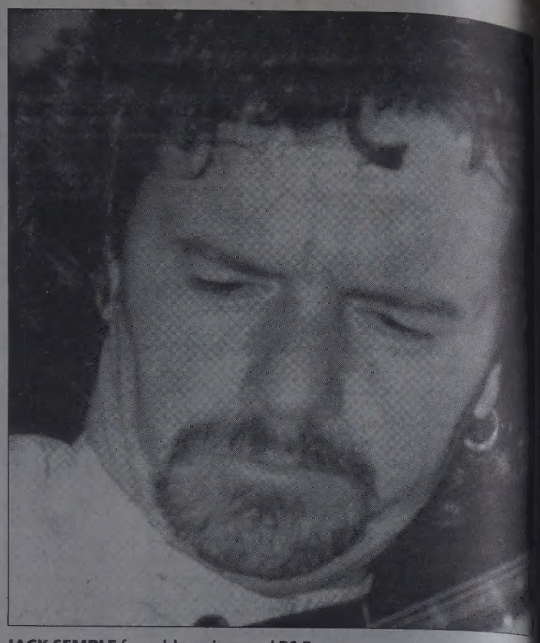
HUMBLING EXPERIENCE: I performed a song for Joni Mitchell when she was inducted into the Saskatchewan Recording Industry Hall Of Fame in Saskatoon. I'm in awe of her creative output so I was very nervous.

FAVOURITE ARTIST: B.B. King. He's the best blues musician on the planet. He's also had the sort of career every musician dreams of having.



JACK SEMPLE fuses blues, jazz and R&B.

Happy Blue Year

Hot blues acts something to look forward to

Ahead of the Beat
PETER NORTH

Anyone who is a blues fan in this city couldn't have helped but notice that there were some major shifts in responsibilities at venues of the late summer.

Mike Purcell who had long managed Blues On Whyte won his bid to take over the Sidetrack Café with a group of investors which left an opening at the popular Strathcona watering hole.

James Good who had been involved with the 'Track a year ago, just long enough to spit and polish his shoes, ended up taking over Purcell's position and he has been very busy filling up the Blues On Whyte calendar well into the new year.

The talent buyer has decided a number of the acts that have regularly played the room over the past few years should continue doing so. To his credit he's looking beyond the obvious sources and his calendar is dotted with a few names that are most welcome additions to the live scene.

A couple of these acts made mighty favourable impressions in our city at gigs promoted by Blues International.

Curtis Salgado, who filled in for Paul DeLay at the Labatt Blues Festival in August, will be here for a three-night stand starting Jan. 21. The Rusty Zinn Band who opened for Shemekia Copeland at the Shaw Conference Centre last spring, then returned to play the Hawrelak Park Amphitheatre at the same festival as both a headliner and the back-up for the legends in the Rolling Fork Revue, will take on a week long stint at Blues On Whyte between May 6 and 11.

This observer is just as pleased to see the name Jr. Watson on Good's calendar as that ferocious southern-California guitarist is also slated for a six nighter in the second week of April.

Watson's credentials speak for themselves as the player has been a force with Kim Wilson's Blues All-Stars and recorded a couple of notable solo albums. Some of his best work to date found him painting thick reverberating tones across tunes like Bullfrog Blues, Hucklebuck and Mercury Blues on a sadly overlooked Canned Heat disc called Reheated. Watson and his band are pegged to play a six nighter from April 8 thru 13.

Good is also drawing on the best blues in our own backyard and with all of the Rockin' Highliners except vocalist Robert Tycholis living back in Alberta, it has made some interesting combinations of players available for week long engagements in the new year.

Jammin' for Santa

Mike McDonald keeps a Christmas tradition alive

SANTAS ANONYMOUS JAM

With his band on hiatus while he adjusts to the responsibilities of parenthood, Mike McDonald has kept a low profile in the last year. But just like clockwork, he's back organizing the Santas Anonymous Jam at the Rosebowl. It's a popular tradition that's close to McDonald's heart, and every year the musicians willingly donate their time. This year Bill Bourne, Lester Quitzau, Math Debaters, Swamp Flowers, Ev Laroi, Tanyss Nixi and the Western Casket Factory, Greyhound Tragedy (unplugged), Painting Daisies, and the Paul Bellows Band will take to the stage. It's not only a good cause, but also an opportunity to watch some of Edmonton's finer musicians in an intimate setting.

"The Rosebowl is my favorite place to play. I never bomb there," he laughs. "And the Rosebowl jam serves a function other than music, like a social function. I feel like the fire tender there, like I gotta keep it going."

Every year the benefit tops itself, and last year the show raised close to $1,500. This year McDonald will attempt to reach $2,000. The show never fails to entertain, and the small restaurant/bar perfectly fits the bill for the eclectic mix of musicians that take the stage. "It's a truly alternative spot," muses McDonald.

"People from every walk of life: cops and punks, old farts, you name it."

The Santas Anonymous Jam takes place on Sunday, Dec. 16, at the Rosebowl Lounge (10111 - 117 St.) and is hosted by Winston Herbert.

BRENT OLIVER AND STEVE DERPACK

Get your scorecard; can't tell the players without a scorecard. Just to clarify the major trade that went down over the last week: the Rev snapped up the New City Likwid Lounge's Brent Oliver after losing free agent Steve Derpack to the University of Alberta in late November. Oliver had decided to retire in his prime, planning to devote his energies to the Green Pepper Hockey League. Rev owner Oliver Friedmann quickly offered him a position, which Oliver decided to accept.

Instead of taking the winter off to relax as planned after quitting the Lounge, Oliver will continue to concentrate on booking live acts, while Derpack will book the Power Plant and Myer Horowitz Theatre, among other university venues. Both booking agents will continue to rock out in their respective bands — Derpack with Mollys Reach and This Civil Twilight, Oliver with Shady Pines, Knights in White Satan and a few more we don't know about.

Beyond Celtic

Riverdance fiddler goes global

Preview
Eileen Ivers
Dec. 15
At the Winspear Centre

How does one come to grips with a hybrid of Celtic roots music that blends Irish jigs and reels with bluegrass, jazz, Caribbean, salsa, flamenco, rock, reggae, funk, hip hop and African, all mixed together with a smattering of electronica? You hire Eileen Ivers to play for you. What you get, ultimately, is a form of world-fusion music which will leave you gasping for breath from the sheer speed of it and at the same time melt your heart with those moving, melancholy ballads.

Ivers has legitimate claims to her Irish roots. Both of her parents emigrated from Ireland, and Ivers was born and raised within an Irish community of the Bronx in New York City. She feels that her parents wished for her and her older sister to learn something about their Irish heritage and got them involved in things such as step-dancing.

"I really didn't like that. I just remember seeing fiddles around the house and hearing them and I just thought that was a neat instrument. I never kind of got into [classical music]. I went to one fiddle teacher when I was like eight years old and he was a traditional Irish teacher and he came from Ireland."

Speaking highly of and with deep affection for her sole teacher and mentor, the late Martin Mulvihill, Ivers related how she soon also quickly became influenced by many other sources. She keenly began listening to other types, styles and genres of music. "In the world beyond, I really opened up listening to the Grappellis of the world and Jean-Luc Ponty and really trying to open myself up to a lot of that stuff."

Although she soon came to the fore by winning seven All-Ireland Fiddle Championships as well as a display cupboard full of medals, those external influences are what eventually opened up the whole musical art form for Ivers and soon got her involved with the Riverdance troupe. "That was back in June of '95. The composer of the show, Bill Whelan, gave me a shout. They started the show in Dublin for a couple of weeks. Their original fiddle player couldn't make the opening in London. I had about less than a week to learn the show." It was Riverdance which brought true open exposure to this wireless blue electric fiddle player. Her antics on stage while playing soon endeared her to the audiences. "You're breaking down that boundary — that fourth wall — you're really hitting them. Once I saw the reaction, that changed a lot of the way I looked at performing after that."

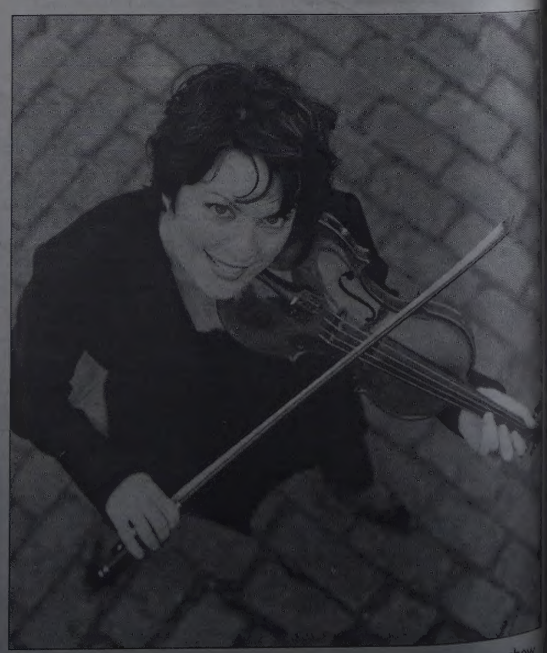
Her instrument is her expressive vehicle. "The fiddle lends itself to stretching over and playing in all these great ethnic styles. It is so expressive — it can be rhythmic and it can be mournful."

Ivers believes strongly that the members of her band also contribute directly to the style of music which comes out at the very end. "Our band's music was openly embraced [in Ireland]. You see this Spanish dude on drums; we have an African bass player. All these cultures are up here on stage, and then we have a very straight up Irish Uilleann piper and Irish guitarist. Our vocalist is this guy who for the last bunch of years was actually singing with the original Blues Brothers Band and he brings this amazing soul voice — this bluesy and very heartfelt voice to the band. He also plays blues harmonica."

'I just remember seeing fiddles around the house and hearing them, and I just thought it was a neat instrument' EILEEN IVERS

Ivers has also embraced the use of electronics with the fiddle, but all within a strictly musical context.

Ivers and her touring band will be performing as part of the World at Winspear Concert Series this Saturday night beginning at 8:00 p.m. Although the show has been entitled "A Celtic Christmas," Ivers promises that there will be more than seasonal music performed at the concert.



EILEEN IVERS prides herself on presenting a diverse, high energy show with musical influences from around the world.

Like life, rock imitates wrestling

by Craig ELLIOTT

[illegible]ou were one to believe in bad [illegible]s happening in threes, you'd [illegible] starting to get worried about [illegible]at's coming next after Ernie [illegible]ombs dies, joined directly by [illegible] Whalen.

[illegible]e didn't know it then, but [illegible]hile Stampede Wrestling was [illegible]livering our first lessons in [illegible]urday afternoon postmod[illegible]ism, Ed Whalen was there to [illegible]ide us through it with his hon[illegible]st forthright characterizations. [illegible]ho could have guessed that he [illegible]ould teach us so much about [illegible]ck and roll? The Strokes *Is This [illegible] (RCA) = the Dynamite Kid — [illegible]'s got the wrong affiliations, [illegible] his abilities are too great to [illegible]y. Unpredictable verses, [illegible]xplosive choruses, executed with [illegible]ecision, with enough oomph to [illegible]roject it all the way to the back [illegible] the room. Delivered from [illegible]erywhere in the ring, including [illegible]e top rope.

[illegible]heir playing bursts with ener[illegible]y. Your heart will beat faster. [illegible]hey've got a strong foundation [illegible]uilt on the classic moves — [illegible]elvet Underground, Nirvana — [illegible]aken in brand new directions. Na[illegible]rally charismatic, still willing to work hard; like the wrestler, the Strokes have the whole package, but Dynamite Kid's high-flying, high-impact style sent him from the ring early in his career, too damaged to continue. What will become of them?

Beulah The Coast is Never Clear (Velocette) = Mr. Hito — he's a tough, deceptive technician, able to beat his opponents in a number of different ways. He can catch them unawares early, wrapping them up in a small package, but he's also got chops and kicks and an amazing array of moves at his disposal. Beulah take to their work in the same way, attacking with fresh combinations of choruses, verses and lyrical turns like "Just because he loves you too / He wouldn't ever take a bullet for you" from the just as wittily titled Popular Mechanics for Lovers.

Piano, flute, horn and string sections and old R&B guitar licks as the mood of the match dictates; just when you think you've got them figured out, Hito and Beulah are two thoughts ahead.

Durability is a must: no matter what sort of beating you've taken [illegible]

Fugazi The Argument (Dischord) = Bret [illegible] puts the grit' in integr[illegible] [illegible] something new sated.

Witnes[illegible]ing science like this is a [illegible]. There are moves the fans can always [illegible] the performer [illegible] where and when [illegible] key and the true students of the game can adjust it at will. When the end of the bout comes, will it be an astute observation delivered from the top rope, the occasional foreign object in the form of an extra drummer, or an agonizing submission riff that forces a tap out? Wait and see. Wait! Need a heel? Mr. Whalen had no use for [illegible] Foley = Col. Parker *Rock and Roll Music (V2). That goofy "Let the good times roll" slogan and stupid moustache! His charges were better than he ever was. On the rare occasion when he'd get inside the ring, the dismantling of his fat carcass would be so immediate that he'd have to cheat to escape with his life.

The DJ's DJs

H-Foundation are house legends in the making

by Richard OZERO

Review

Hipp-E & Halo
Saturday, December 8
at New City Suburbs

Hipp-E & Halo. House legends in the making, and if you love house music, and didn't make it down to their show, you should be kicking yourself. They are the DJ's DJs. After a disappointing no-show earlier this year for a Nexus gig, a three-and-a-half hour set over at the New City Suburbs on Saturday was definitely a much anticipated kiss-and-make-up session. Nexus' Shelly Solarz says, "There was only one reason for booking them — I love their music. They are the guys who make the records DJs buy." Amen. They're managed by Elite, with heavy hitters Armand Van Helden and Josh Wink in the same stable.

The unwritten rule of respect for Superstar DJs was in effect that night. Around 250 people faced the decks as they danced, trying to keep one eye on the DJ, and their mind's eye on where the music was taking them.

The duo, known as the H-Foundation, has a residency at Fabric London, slamming down the tracks overseas every 5 weeks. But here in Edmonton, they were showing their roots.

Halo hails from Chicago, the birthplace of house. Halo, aka Brian Varga, is a down-to-earth party animal. He said Saturday that there's nothing he loves better than "to see the ladies move." The 27-year-old got hooked on house listening to Hot Mix 5 with Farry Jackmaster Funk and Derrick Carter. Halo started off as most do — working his ass off to afford some turntables. At nine-years-old, he got his first job at Chicago's Hip House Records. By 12 he had started playing school dances and house parties. It didn't take long for his name to get around the city

Six years ago Halo [illegible] with his now partner [illegible] Eric Galaciz. The 29 [illegible] made a name for hi[illegible] west coast before tea[illegible] Halo. The Colorado na[illegible] more reserved talking [illegible] status as a new-era hou[illegible] but he hit the global [illegible] ahammer, playing sl[illegible] trend-setting clubs, fro[illegible] (London) and Twilo (Ne[illegible] to More (Amsterdam), [illegible] in Montreal, Turkey, Br[illegible] Zealand, and all over his [illegible] land.

During their show in Edmonton, the pair swapped turns on the tables frequently, keeping things fresh. Th[illegible] spin any of their own vinyl [illegible] gigs, but rather support [illegible] the Tango, Nightshift, Blue[illegible] (Halo's own) and Siesta labe[illegible]

Halo loves where he's at [illegible] now, playing and creating [illegible] Both DJs are becoming hot [illegible] modities on the remix and [illegible] duction side of things. Hipp-E's goal is to "contribute some[illegible] back to house music." Mi[illegible] accomplished.

Their one night stand h[illegible] wrapped up at Therapy, part of a grueling international tour. Hipp-E says they've only been home two weeks in the past two months. Both credit the fans for the energy that keeps them going. They'll take every opportu[illegible] they can to share their common love — deep, driving house. Most of their dates have been international; they claim the mood is [illegible] too mellow in the states in the wake of September. The pair expects things to pick back up [illegible] time for the release of their latest as-yet untitled album due out [illegible] March. In the meantime, to get your fill, you'll be able to pick up some mixed CDs of nights recorded in England and Australia [illegible] ing soon to store shelves in Edmonton.

Cups of kindness

A few suggestions for seeing in 2002

What? Is 2001 really almost over? No, stop thinking that — we haven't even had Christmas yet. There's a ton of 2001 left, especially when you consider the pervasive anything-can-happen atmosphere of the last few months. It could be months before they run Dick Clark up the flagpole in Times Square, or whatever inscrutable celebratory rite it is our neighbours to the south indulge in. And there's still all that festive shopping you've been putting off— so much living left to do in 2001!

But really, will it be such a bad thing when 2001 finally does draw to a close? First of all, as more than one wag has pointed out, it wasn't anything like the movie. And second of all, there's that war business to be by the next millennium, as well as floating around in allusions to Brahms and battle-ware on-board computers — than the people we have to share planet with. Outlandish thousands, maybe everyone will have something to eat and a place to live too.

Seems only fitting (or 'meet,' as Shakespeare would say) that a momentous eventful year should conclude with an eventful night. Got any plans yet? If there's one thing Bill Clinton taught us this year, it's the ignorance of a master plan has dire consequences. You don't want to displease God, now do you? The NAACP are sure sorry. You might just want to give thought to the terminal day. And for one night, baby, it's about YOU!

BLUES

What's that you say? You love the music and wish to spend the night of the year grooving to its primal rhythms and mythic evocations of human woe? Sister/brother, are you in luck — Edmonton's normal steady flow of blues erupts into a swirling eddy which might, under the right circumstances, turn into a festive maëlstrom on New Year's.

For that authentic, sweaty, draft-drenched night-at-the-Commie experience, you're ironically advised to consider the Sidetrack Café for your New Year's merry-making. Calgary's House of Payne raise the roof with doubleproof electric blues, starting at 9:30 p.m. and going until you can't. Tickets are $30 with dinner, or $10 for lounge seats. Who needs a seat — you'll be dancing, right? Call the Sidetrack at 421-1326 for more information.

For those of you who crave an authentic authentic night-at-the-Commie experience, Blues on Whyte will feature Motep's Groove, who were Blueswater Express in a previous life.

Blues on the Hill presents ever-youthful Tacoy Ryde on their stage which, for $35, you can enjoy after a three-course meal at Piatti. Not hungry? Tickets are $1[illegible] in advance or $15 at the door. [illegible] 454-3063 for the fine details.

It's not entirely fair to identify Bobby Cameron with the blues because — although he bends a mean guitar string — there's so much more to Bobby Cameron than blues. But who said life was fair? Cameron's band plays Tin Pan Alley this New Year, which means you get to eat too! Tickets are $49.95 and include supper at 8 p.m., champagne and party favours. Call 702-2060 for ticket info. The show starts at 10 p.m.

DANCE

Dance clubs are popular amongst the youth of today, as are gay bars. Coincidence? We think not. Buddy's and Secrets are both promoting New Year's Eve festivities at moderate prices, as are Juice Dance Lounge and the Power Plant. The Roost hosts a serious retro theme night — think way back. Those in a dress-up mood can check out the Masquerade Ball at Rum Jungle. Tickets are $39.95 plus GST until Dec. 15. All of the above include bubbly, munchies and party favours.

ROCK

Classic rock is another form of music, and one that has many proponents in Edmonton. Does the name Tom Cochrane mean anything to you? Does it get more classic-er than Life is a Highway? You tell me — or you can tell it to the man himself. Cochrane will be at Nashville's Electric Roadhouse you-know-when. Tickets are $59.25 (plus s/c) at Ticketmaster and include champagne and party favours.

Also on the radio rock front, the Watchmen get all groovy for you at the Shaw Conference Centre at the Bear's Children's Fund New Year's Eve Bash. Tickets are $30 (+ GST + s/c) from Ticketmaster.

But if what you really want to see is guys pretending they're rock stars, there's no place you'd rather be than rocking out at the New City Likwid Lounge. Quasi-'80s metal drag artists Knights in White Satan and Wicked Fantasy wish you a Happy Crüe Year for only $12 in advance or $15 at the door. Advance tickets are for the having at Blackbyrd, Freecloud, Listen and the Lounge.

Next door at the Suburbs, the grand tradition of The $5 New Year's Eve Party, in all its festive splendour, is carried forth into 2002. DJs Blue Jay and nik rofeelya are your musical hosts.

And down the street, Fox and Hounds is still finalizing the participants in its Battle of the Bands.

You want to see stars in the making, then check out the Hi-Phoniqs at the Paris Market Loft, I shit you not. Live funk-R&B-hip hop that comes off the stage at you. Your ticket also gets you an audience with DJ Spilt Milk and goes to benefit The Works Society's education programs. Tickets are available from Colour Blind and The Works Office. Call 991-3104 for info.

Another DJ available for all with 18+ ID to enjoy is DJ Rage, who will be working the slipmats at Parliament. Advance tickets are limited, $10, and available from the club at 434-5366.

Saxophonist Brett Miles presides over a five-course meal at Four Rooms. Tickets are $50 with dinner, $15 for just the show.

If what you're really interested in is a band named after a post-renaissance movie star who can't buy a hit, come on over to Red's, where disco purveyors the Travoltas lay down the grooves. Indoor fireworks and $30,000 in door prizes sweeten the deal. Tickets are $19.95 - $44.95 depending on how much food you'll need. Early bird sales in effect so call the club — quick! — at 481-6420.

Mustard Smile provides the soundtrack to the festivities at Urban Lounge, which will likely include merriment, revelry and tasty food from their kitchen. Tickets are $20.

COUNTRY

Back on the live music tip, as my country homies like to say, country fans can celebrate the 20th Anniversary of Cook County Saloon's New Year's Party with Duane Steele and Aaron Lines. Tickets are $30 in advance and $40 at the door. Call 432-COOK. Cool, hunh?

Longrider's Saloon features a dinner, dance and late lunch with Stephanie Thompson for $25 but the country music bargain of the night must be Old Reliable at the Black Dog for their third New Year behind chicken wire — Callum K[illegible] Rennie was there last year, [illegible] never mind. Tickets are $1[illegible] the Dog.

Musical Snow job

Touring company tackles darker fairy tale

by Kevin X. WILSON

Sure, Snow White has it tough. But other folks have feelings too.

How come no one spares a thought for the evil queen? No one, that is, except for Garner Butler and Jeff Unger, whose musical version of the fairy tale, says publicist/performer Crystal Hanson, "is a lot about the queen and her struggles and challenges as an aging woman" faced with the challenge she feels from a beautiful young girl.

Snow White
Until Dec. 22
Alberta Opera Touring Company
Varscona Theatre

The Alberta Opera Touring Company has been taking musical theatre provincewide, primarily to schools, for 18 years, with over 200 performances last year. For the second year, however, the company is pleased to be mounting a full-fledged production in theatres — with a set that doesn't have to be collapsible.

This production is a little darker than Cinderella, which Butler and Unger adapted for the company last year. Nevertheless, says Hanson, this is a family show — no matter how resistable your kids may initially find the lure of operetta. "Garner and Jeff, the way they write, the show is very mature, but not over the heads of children. It reaches adults and children alike. When we go into the schools, the teachers love it as much as the kids do." Shows run Thursday to Sunday at 7 p.m., with matinees Saturday and Sunday at 2 p.m.

Brits keep coming

Musical revue satisfies despite omissions

by Andrew HANON

Remember that Billy Joel song We Didn't Start the Fire, the one that's little more than a listing of historical figures of note to baby boomers? Remember how, despite its cloying self-indulgence, it's fun to listen to if only to try to catch all the names you recognize? That's pretty much the same feeling you come away with after an evening of The British Invasion at the Mayfield dinner theatre. It's like a playing a game of musical Trivial Pursuit, testing your knowledge of pop-culture icons of the last 40 years.

Review

The British Invasion
Mayfield Dinner Theatre
Until Feb. 1
★★★ 1/2 (out of five)

The eight-member cast does a remarkable job of bringing to life dozens of Brit rockers, from Petula Clark to Gerry and the Pacemakers to the Spice Girls. The most spot-on impersonations are Martin H. Murphy's Joe Cocker, complete with dragged-through-the-gravel voice and spazzy gyrations, Pamela Gordon's Sinead O'Connor and Kevin Dabbs' mop-top Paul McCartney. Christian Goutsis deserves special mention for his preposterously lecherous incoherent Mick Jagger.

The narration implies that the show is a definitive history of British popular music, but there are some glaring omissions and questionable inclusions. The segment devoted to Irish contributions makes no mention of U2. Bananarama is included, while Paul Weller and the Clash are overlooked. It seems more likely that some of the music is chosen to suit the cast, not because of any great historical significance.

But that's okay. It's all for fun. Director James Brewer and choreographer Christine Bandelow get a lot out of their performers, resulting in a high-energy trip down memory lane.

Not feather brained

Puppet Project a fun piece of theatre

by Jacqueline JANELLE

Anyone who has ever sat at their kitchen table and questioned the genetic link between themselves and the rest of their family can relate to The Blackbird Puppet Project. Calgary's Green Fools Physical Theatre Company uses marionettes, hand puppets, masks and stilts to create a magical story in which a mischievous raven places two orphaned blackbird eggs in the wrong "nests."

Review

Blackbird Puppet Project
Green Fools Company
Until Dec. 16
Arts Barns
★★★1/2 (out of five)

One goes to a condor, the other to the childless farmers who shot and killed the blackbird mother. If you can accept that two humans could mistake a small, feathered creature for a little girl (and the children in the audience had no trouble with this), the story of the two misplaced animals in search of their true identities is engaging.

The Fools create strong personalities without turning the birds into "people." The puppets speak only gibberish; puppeteer Jennie Esdale's physical expressiveness enhances the puppet's personalities. Unfortunately, a solid fifteen minutes full of squawking and without movement in the latter half of the play left the adults in the audience bewildered.

During the question-and-answer session following the performance, the actors had an easy rapport with children and fielded questions ranging from puppet construction to ornithology.

The educational and entertaining guidebook that families are encouraged to take home adds another dimension to the performance. The booklet contains family activities and entry-points for creating a dialogue with children around the story's themes. It might be easier for younger children to understand the basis of the "egg-switching" if families read the guidebook before watching the production.

The Blackbird Puppet Project is a fun piece of theatre that raises important questions about honesty, love, and the environment without being heavy-handed.

Jennie Esdale as errant blackbird

LEAVING THE SAP IN THE TREE

Keep reading — even when you see That Word.

Although you may dread the yearly tsunami that Christmas can be, you can mark the occasion without feeling like you're being force-fed mincemeat tarts.

To those of you who smell a Grinch, remember that it isn't just the contrary who want to sidestep the sap. "Some families don't celebrate, and some people aren't happily in love," says Kristy Harcourt, host of CJSR's Gaywire program. "Sometimes there aren't happy endings. When you're surrounded by a culture that shows that to you all the time, you feel like a freak!"

To help subdue involuntary feelings of yuletide freakishness, Harcourt and a host of local luminaries gathered downtown in the cosy and colourful confines of Studio E to record Bring on the Cold, Gaywire's fourth annual Winter Pageant.

What we really wanted people to do was to bring us songs about diverse lives at the holidays," says Harcourt, "to counter the saccharine stuff that people feel excluded from — which I always shorthand as the Touched by an Angel Family Reunion Christmas Special."

Bucking against the crowd doesn't mean running down the season. "This is a really happy show, but it's a really happy show about diverse stories. We want to bring something to people that doesn't oversimplify."

That's why Bring on the Cold features Sheri Somerville (accompanied by song co-writer Darrin Hagen) singing about a wife in the Middle Ages waiting for her husband to come home; Andrea House, singing the show's title tune about looking forward to Christmas, having lost a friend; Bryce Kulak (whom Harcourt

ERSATZ WEDDING RETURNS

Which stage production is so well known that its characters feature in a U.S. advertisement for underarm deodorant?

That would be Tony 'N' Tina's Wedding, the largely improvised entirely fictitious Italian wedding that continues its run in Edmonton this weekend.

"I call it the poor man's Fantasy Island," says director Gil Allen. "Rather than flying off to some exotic island, you drive to the Silver Slipper — and for a night, anything can happen."

Theatre SCENE

The chief appeal of the imaginary nuptials? "I think people like to see dysfunctional people doing normal things," says Allen. "The premise is that this is a big Italian wedding and these people are dysfunctional. That's pretty much it. There really is no script."

That's not to say that the show is unstructured, says Allen. "There's a ton of paperwork. There's background on the characters. But in terms of scripted material, you've got about half an hour. 45 minutes." Measure that against the show's four-and-a-half-hour length.

That means that the shows take on individual characters in each of the cities in which they play. In fact, "Even within a given production, no two shows are the same. [The actors] have timelines to meet. They know certain events are going to occur. They don't always occur exactly the same every night."

The result: "We've had audience members see the show nine different times."

And the best part about this wedding is that there are no lasting nasty consequences. "It's a really safe environment," says Allen. "They often get five or six women who come together. Where else can they go, drink way too much, eat a big Italian dinner, dance with guys, and know that nothing's going to happen."

Tony 'N' Tina's Wedding continues Dec. 14, 21, 22, and 31 at the Silver Slipper, Northlands Park.

Improving reality

Whatever Nature doesn't bestow on a subject, photographer Wei Yew adds with his computer

by Jacqueline JANELLE

There is no such a thing as a bad photograph — just ones that need a nip here and a tuck there. Wei Yew is a master of improving on nature's bounty. He can make holiday memories shinier and happier. He can change a miserable, grey day on the English coast to a pristine seaside afternoon complete with light breezes and dappled sunlight. He can infuse a fading summer garden with rejuvenated colour and texture.

'The whole objective is to let the viewer see the potential of a photograph when you add a different background.'

PHOTOGRAPHER WEI YEW

He is a prolific shooter with an eye for composition. On a 62-day road trip through 10 European countries, Yew took 6,000 photographs. He never waits for the right lighting. Instead, he relies on the power of computers to bring any lacklustre images to life.

Yew is not a photographer; he is a computer whiz. A graphic designer by trade, he uses Photoshop to subtly, and sometimes drastically, alter the images he has taken. "It is able to give you a whole new perspective on what you saw," says Yew. He has assembled a sampling of some of his "adjusted" holiday photos for his first exhibit, Photo Eclectic, in Commerce Place.

PhotoEclectic
Photographs by Wei Yew
Until Dec. 22
Commerce Place, 1st floor

Part of Yew's vision for the exhibit is to inspire others to explore the possibilities computer graphics offer. "The whole objective is to let the viewer see the potential of a photograph when you add a different background," he says. He has included brief examples of how he improved his images with the help of Photoshop. There are before-and-after samples with added shadows and more shades of green than his lens picked up. "With a computer you can build in levels of contrast and then suddenly the picture has a little more depth," says Yew. Included is a collection of the same image of Stonehenge superimposed on a variety of backgrounds, ranging from lightning bolts tearing across the heavens to a tsunami wave threatening the heavy stone structure.

No main theme ties his photographs together — hence the name Photo Eclectic. They range from sentimental landscapes to quirky twists on architecture and nature. The unifying thread is that all have been digitally altered — real life improved upon. Yew gives a simple daisy a shot of daring by changing its centre from yellow to vibrant green; the winding staircase at the Vatican flows up and out into the head of a red cabbage.

Yew has always embraced the digital world. He is a pioneer in his industry. In 1983, his graphic design company, Studio 3 Graphics, was the first firm in Alberta to integrate computers with graphic design. Most recently Yew, with some partners, launched an eMedia school in downtown Edmonton, where the designer teaches some of the techniques displayed at his exhibit.

Always a strong financial supporter of the Arts Community, he donates regularly to the Citadel, The Arts District, the International Children's Festival, the Shumka Dancers, and the iHuman 2000 Peace Initiative, among others. His Photo Eclectic exhibit is no exception: all of the images are for sale, with all proceeds going to support the Works Education Foundation. With prices ranging from $150 to $175 for a signed original work, Yew hopes most of his creations will find themselves neatly wrapped under someone's Christmas tree this season.

SIMPLE BEAUTY Wei Yew's technique is to shoot with whatever available light there is, and then fix any flaws with his computer.

TRAVEL

Forging ahead

We can't let fear of terrorism keep us from seeing the world

by Phil MENDZAT

After the tragic events of Sept. 11, a question that has been posed to me is, "After what happened in New York, would you cancel any travel plans?"

I can say with absolute conviction, no.

I know I can say this because I have been in a very similar situation. Two years ago, doomsday predictions of the millennium bug, terrorist attacks, blackouts, and no one getting laid convinced a lot of people to stay at home with their canned goods on Dec. 31, 1999. I was also told that if you were foolish enough, one of the worst things you could do was travel and if you did it would be insane to go to the Middle East.

Sounded like a green light to me.

When I told my friends my plan to spend New Year's Eve in Jerusalem, some started putting dibs on my stuff in case I never made it back; others had mixed reactions, most along the lines of questioning my sanity and describing to me the effects of car bombs and bullets on body parts.

'When I told my friends my plan to spend New Year's Eve in Jerusalem, some started putting dibs on my stuff.'

The countless experiences I had on that trip seem almost unreal now and it's difficult to think of words to describe them all. When I tell some of the tales to my friends, I can't help but get a Cheshire-cat grin and end up laughing about all the insanity. How do you describe living in a historical-religious-political pressure-cooker like Jerusalem or the people you meet? People such as the fellow traveller with ideas and philosophies so similar it feels like you are talking to a strange, shorter reincarnation of yourself, or the not-quite-right-in-the-head guy from your hostel who insists on relaying messages from God to you? How do you explain the humour behind why you had to threaten your roommates, whom you hold dear, with a knife? How do you explain the joys of 12-hour workdays fishing with a crazy Israeli captain who once pointed a flare gun at another boat; the relationship with your favourite crewmate and the evenings spent talking about philosophy and how it took every bit of self-control to refrain from jamming a sardine into the crack of the captain's ass just above his loose-fitting pants? Then there are the stories I can only tell my priest.

And it all almost never happened. Because, I must admit, there were times when I questioned my plans and wondered what the outcome would be and if I should cancel my trip. As I said, fortunately I never listened. Now, those little anxiety pangs I had before that trip were nothing compared to the feeling I get when I ask myself "What if I never went?"

Yeah sure, the stories are good but really, the only reason I bother to tell them is so that whoever hears them will hopefully get the urge to go out and get their own stories; nothing would make me happier than that. Because along the line of collecting all these travelogues something else may happen, something that could change everything.

See FEAR, page 23

BLACK DAY Ever since the World Trade Centre attack, many North Americans have been afraid to venture beyond their own borders.

Fear

But instead, now I am just hearing the reasons why no one should go anywhere and it sounds all too familiar. Never mind asking what might happen if you go; what might happen if you don't go?

I am not trying to downplay the significance of what has happened in New York. But the truth is that travel anywhere at times involves a certain degree of risk. It is, however, not fair to play on fears and magnify the risks beyond proportion. True, I would not encourage travel to the Middle East right now but it is a big world out there and you stand a better chance of getting killed by a drunk driver than you do any political or religious extremist.

My six month tour of the Middle East or any other trip I have taken was not all fun. Like any journey it was full of difficulties, challenges and at times tension. But what really worth doing isn't? But even these stories change after the trip [illegible] Getting lost in the woods [illegible] poisoning [illegible] toilet [illegible] at least the [illegible] it. Ocean's 11 makes the most of its strenghts

by Stephen NOTLEY

Review

Ocean's 11
Now playing
Directed by Steven Soderbergh
Cineplex Odeon

So this is what a star vehicle that actually has an engine feels like. Ocean's 11 sporty, it's fast, it'll zip you down the highway. Not to mention you get to hang out with George Clooney and Brad Pitt and Carl Reiner. Not bad at all.

What's not to like? Bring together a bunch of movies stars who don't suck, back them up with a load of awesome supporting guys, pour them into a slick remake of an old Frank Sinatra film (which I haven't seen but is rumored to be bad), and make sure the guy in charge is Steven Soderbergh. It's a cinch.

While there's nothing earth-shattering about Ocean's 11, it's still a deep breath on a spring morning just because, hey, all the pieces are working as they should. It's slick, confident — and since it's about a pile of cool guys who are also slick and confident, the whole thing meshes.

We already know the plot. In caper movies, the plot is always the same. A guy comes up with a caper, he puts together a team, they plan, and then they pull off the heist. In this year's other caper movies (Heist, The Score), the rest of the movies' energy has been devoted to pitting the grim personalities against each other in some way that's supposed to create drama. Not in Ocean's 11. Everybody's on board here, and everything just sails along on the charm of its people and the snappiness of Soderbergh's rhythms.

George Clooney. Always awesome. Watch Three Kings and O Brother, Where Art Thou? again if you don't believe me. Here, of course, he's Danny Ocean, a guy whose card just says "Danny Ocean." Just out of prison (a simple opening scene that gets you grinning right away with some cool understated music and some Soderbergh jump), Clooney zips down to Hollywood and hooks up with Brad Pitt.

Brad Pitt. Also awesome. It's tempting to hate him for being so handsome, but unfortunately he consistently makes good films and is always great in them: Seven, 12 Monkeys, Fight Club, Snatch. Sure, he's made some lamers as well, but who cares about that when he can claim three or four classic movie roles? In Ocean's 11, he and Clooney just, bam, they're two old buddies cruising around getting the boys on board. No hassle, no deep subtext, just smooth scenes with cool guys planning to rob $150 million from Andy Garcia.

Lot of good supporting stuff in here as well. Carl Reiner, the director of The Jerk, does a fine turn as a wattled, aging scammer who has to run a con as an implacable German arms merchant. Shaobo Qin is a tiny little Chinese dude that does some fairly fancy twisty things. Elliott Gould makes for a great aging con guy putting up the cash for Ocean's plan.

The only guy who's off is Don Cheadle, which is pretty damn disturbing, considering how awesome he almost always is. Here, though, he's got to do this godawful English accent that's about as convincing as your mum's knickers. Weird.

Sadly, Julia Roberts is completely wasted, and actually kind of offensively presented, as little more than another prize to be won. Strange, considering how well she did in Erin Brockovich, also by Soderbergh.

Regardless, Ocean's 11 is damn fun. It's the best movie out there this weekend, for sure. Oh, except Amélie. Take your pick.

Food Safety Wednesday, Dec. 19 (BodyHELP!)
The book "Healthy Immunity" by Lorna Vanderhaeghe claims that much of what we eat is totally suspect. And she uses science and research to back her up.. Which, no doubt, is of use when the Dairy Farmers come-a-callin' to find out why she's telling people that milk is loaded with hormones and pus--yes, pus.

Expect me to engage all our Food Safety experts about what's left out there for us to eat? Of course you expect honest discourse. So do I. And I won't let either of us down.

Visit Middle Earth

Fellowship's special effects enhance story

The Fellowship of the Ring
Opens Wednesday, Dec. 19
Cineplex Odeon/Famous Players

The Fellowship of the Ring is the first of three movies (shot simultaneously and slated for release at one year intervals) which comprise the Tolkien epic about the future of a civilization, which depends on the fate of One Ring and on whether Frodo, the hobbit, can travel through the twilight world of Sauron to the Mountain of Doom.

There is a wry joke among the cast and crew of this film. Tolkien wrote this classic in 1954: It's taken technology half a century to catch up and bring the story to the screen with the same delicacy with which it was written. Without question, this was a massive project, taking one and a half years to shoot. The technical team alone numbered over 120 people.

And this is the odd dichotomy of Lord of the Rings: should you immerse yourself in the story or in the technology? The reconciliation of the two presented itself in New York in the person of Richard Taylor. Head of the flick's special effects house in New Zealand, where the film was shot, Taylor is hardly the slick Industrial Light and Magic wizard you'd find in California. He comes across as an oversized hobbit: polite, humble and just as happy to talk about the low-tech effects as the high-tech results. Oh yes, and from the age of 10, he had a print of Hieronymus Bosch's triptych of Paradise and Hell on his bedroom wall. Strange child.

"[It's] because we are not in the business," Taylor says, explaining how WETA Limited is just as happy designing a children's playground as creating Middle Earth. In this film, he is most proud of three effects.

The first is the miniaturization of the hobbits. They are under four feet tall. And while Frodo (Elijah Wood), Sam (Sean Astin), Merry (Dominic Monaghan), Pippin (Billy Boyd) and the hobbit who started it all, Bilbo Baggins (Ian Holm) are not basketball players, they did have to be reduced in size. Conversely, the wizards Gandalf (Ian McKellen) and Sauron (Christopher Lee) are inordinately tall. Taylor is equally enthused about the use of small sets. "The use of miniatures gives me the greatest rush, more than anything else. It's painted modern New Zealand with a reality of Middle Earth that firmly places the viewer in that culture," he says. "There's a gritty and visceral realism that places you in the architecture of that world. But the industry has moved away from physical miniatures because it's so much easier to do it digitally, and that misses the textural realism. That's the reason why we did it in real life — not on the computer screen."

'The world feels... utterly cohesive, so it doesn't feel like it was made by a 1990s art department' SFX DIRECTOR RICHARD TAYLOR

The effects were achieved, in typical Kiwi-style, by using a combination of techniques. At the laughably low tech end, Wood would kneel and McKellen would stand on a box. Then there was the sleight of hand, particularly in the tea scene between McKellen and Holm. When Holm would pick up a teacup, the cup was an appropriate size. When the camera shifted to McKellen picking up his cup the item in his hand was a much smaller version. The "hand-made" aspect of the production, Taylor explains, means, "The world feels completely and utterly cohesive so it doesn't feel like it's been made by a 1990s art department. The physical reality of the creatures is such that you totally buy into realism." More than 20,000 household items and 900 suits of armour came out of their shop.

And then there is the light. "Tolkien wrote of a European world. New Zealand has a harsh and beautiful landscape lit by a harsh sun. The light is crisp and white. Middle Earth has European light, which has a much higher moisture content, so everything appears soft and pastelized. The director, Peter Jackson, used film grading and film digital work to colour-enhance and alter the entire look of the film."

Being responsible for the look of a blockbuster in waiting hasn't bruised Taylor's humility. "The public is not going to notice any of this, and that's the wonderful thing because it means our work will feel totally natural to them."

From the standpoint of the actors, who have done more than their fair share of blue-screen acting, working with real objects was apparently convincing enough. "If there was a day when goblins were on set and orcs and urak-hai," says Dominic Monaghan (Merry), "when they had lunch, the goblins would sit here and the orcs would sit there and they'd snarl at each other. The fellowship, regardless of species, always tended to stick together."

Billy Boyd (a.k.a. Pippin) adds, "I was speaking to the casting director over in New Zealand who cast all the extras, and they said the behaviour was incredible, depending on what race we were in the film. The days at Hobbiton, at the party, the hobbits were just mad, running around, losing bits of their costumes, and the days at Rivendell with the elves, everyone had mirrors and they were always checking themselves."

Fat Girl strains to push your buttons

by Mari SASANO

Review

Fat Girl
Opens Friday, Dec. 14
South Edmonton Common
★★★ (out of five)

Ah, Catherine Breillat! You are so bad! The provocatrice of French cinema has done it again, causing the Ontario Censor Board to BAN her latest film, Fat Girl, from being exhibited in theatres in that province.

Speaking of exhibition, one may remember her last film, the so-ironic-it's-stupidly-titled Romance. Gynecologically explicit, it nevertheless was empty of anything more than cheap erotic cliché. I mean, bondage is soooo early '90s.

Fat Girl, though somewhat subtler than Romance, is an attempt to be frank and unrelenting in its portrayal of female adolescent sexuality, but does it deserve to be banned? No. Not really, at least not for the obvious reasons.

The press kit coyly refers to — shocking! — one erect penis (you see it twice), as if it were something that we've never seen before. C'mon folks! It was so dark! Most of us have never seen a murder, but all of us have seen naked people, even if it was a very long time ago. What gives? But censorship aside, the film does deal with elements of teenage girlhood that would make family therapists rub their hands together with delight.

The plot is simple. Two sisters, one a 15-year-old knockout, the other two years younger, overweight and mousy, are on holidays with their parents. Eléna (Roxane Mesquida, a younger, Frenchier Denise Richards) wants to lose her virginity. Her shadow is doughy Anaïs (Anais Redoux), whose name evokes Anaïs Nin, the other French writer of bad erotica.

So, Eléna decides this is the year she loses it and singles out the first guy she makes out with: handsome, Karmann-Ghia driving Italian law student Fernando (Libero de Rienzo). Anaïs thinks this is a bad idea, saying that chosing someone you don't love as your first will circumvent any disappointment after the deed is done. Eléna initially refuses intercourse proper, but is able to justify a little compensatory oral and anal sex — a Clintonesque act of semiotics that allows Fernando to get all the benefits and none of the responsibilities. But the sexuality of the girls is not nearly as interesting as the relationship between the sisters.

Anger and pity surrounds the girls. The two have a normal sisterly dynamic, hating each other for their differences but clinging to each other and fascinated by the experiences of one and the judgement of the other — they are each necessary for the other to create context. For while Eléna is attracting such attention, it is Anaïs she turns to every time, even only to hate her some more.

Breillat doesn't allow chubby Anaïs to become the moral centre of the film. Both girls are characterless, raised by crass bourgeois parents to consume their lives — which both do: one literally, one metaphorically. Her final words following the unexpectedly violent ending — "Don't believe me if you don't want to" — are seemingly a challenge to our conventional ideas about desire, but in the end it's a pyrrhic victory.

But to react to this film merely with the intellect would be irresponsible. There is no way to read Anaïs' final words as heroic. It's a semantic game that, like Eléna's hairsplitting, only allows others to exploit bodies in the name of intellectual wanking.

The problem with Breillat is her insistence on being provocative for its own end. It's distracting and worse even, distorts the lives of the young characters she is attempting to represent. However harsh as it is, go see Fat Girl, because you can.

AS ADVERTISED As you might have guessed from the title, director Catherine Breillat has little sympathy for her characters, including Anaïs (Anaïs Redoux), the central character in Fat Girl.

Unflowery love

Attractive stars sell unassuming romance

by Jodi RAMER

Review

Bread and Tulips
Opens Friday, Dec. 14
At the Princess Theatre
★★★ (out of five stars)

Bread and Tulips, an Italian film directed by Silvio Soldini, makes for some cozy viewing, much needed in the depths of winter. It's nothing if not breezy — a warm sojourn to sunny climes for the film's heroine, as well as the audience. In the mode of those whimsical films that vaguely gesture to magical realism — not in order to disorient your sense of reality, just to introduce the idea that serendipity is around the next corner — Bread and Tulips feels like it couldn't really stand alone, like it needs to fit into a recognizable type to sell itself.

Though it has yet to meet with much fanfare here, this unassuming film swept the Italian version of the Oscars. My guess is that it's because of the star, Licia Maglietta: the Italians love their earth-mother beauties. Here, Maglietta's housewife character, Rosalba, has been produced as a kind of frumpy middle-aged woman begins to glow once she embraces the simple life. I would wager in her home country her presence worked altogether differently.

The American press is busy tastefully explaining how she's not your average starlet, but odd, fleshier... all of which is true. The film itself doesn't believe this at all; it thinks she's a babe, and that viewers will instantly recognize her desirability and that she is deserving of far better things. Better than an aggressive, dead-beat husband and preoccupied kids, all of whom initially fail to notice that their tour bus has left the truant Rosalba behind.

Not that Rosalba doesn't look normal, matronly, even touristy but Maglietta, while utterly convincing, also exudes that sexy self-assured, womanly quality that the Italian cinema adores. It's the heady tradition of Anna Magnani and Sophia Loren.

So Maglietta is an attractive presence, as is her love interest veteran European actor Bruno Ganz. Ganz always carries a dignified intensity — quiet but with murmurings of subterranean complexity. The two aren't given much work-y scenes, and this restraint is a good thing, since the connection between them instantly feels real, adult, and inevitable. Bread and Tulips makes it all register as real rather than outlandish. While these mellow cadences and natural-seeming developments are inviting, sometimes one wishes that it were all a little splashier, that the sun and water-dappled hues of Venice were punched up. After all, the heroine's idyllic getaway is ours, too. Yes, Bread and Tulips is diverting: I wanted to be transported.

★★★★ (out of five)

British artist Martin Creed, who collected a £20,000 prize on the weekend for creating a room with lights that go on and off, explained his piece is what it is.

You might adopt the same stance when you see the new print of Bande A Part. Jean-Luc Godard's 1964 film likely offers a greater prospect of satisfaction than Creed's intermittently illuminated chamber, however.

Although some think the director's work obscure — wilfully or otherwise — and while others will eagerly or anxiously catalogue the literary and cinematic allusions with which Bande A Part is replete, it's the film's human element — no merely accessible but immediate — that makes the strongest impression.

That's to take nothing away from Godard's intricate, highbrow take on Where's Waldo, or his witty playfulness, particularly in an age when whimsy has been equated with fantasy, fit only to be expressed by escalating the zowie appeal of special effects rather than relying on imaginative direction. Godard's success in the latter department can be measured by the number of elements in Bande A Part that have entered the cinematic lexicon — the classic dance sequence, for example, both visually and emotionally affecting, in which the dancers continue their ultra-cool shuffling while the music stops and Godard tells us how isolated they are.

Here is a gangster film — both homage and parody — that transcends the limitations imposed on the form by filmmakers. Heist flicks and their cousins have devolved to sorry depths, slaves to a style of filmmaking that's addicted to events rather than people and is therefore increasingly dependent on contrived circumstances. The only genuine tension comes from uncertainty about the certain outcome that keeps our attention. Characterization, which typically involves investing protagonists with varying degrees of insight, comes later.

But the mystery in Bande A Part comes less from the impending robbery, about which you'll sometimes forget, than from the unresolved distance between the three youths who are the main characters, interesting precisely because they are ordinary, imperfect, naive: Arthur (Claude Brasseur), a tough whose brutality we perceive through the filter of his pessimism; his friend Franz (Sami Frey), a would-be gangster who yearns to express his tenderness and Odile (Anna Karina, the Godard's wife), by turns lovesick giddy, melancholy and terrified pulled reluctantly into a scheme to rob her aunt's house. But Godard doesn't aim to run his fallible characters down; only to watch them. When he twits them, he does it gently, affectionately Brasseur, Frey and Karina are genuinely arresting even in the smallest of moments

Anna Karina in Bande A Parte

The pace and meandering story won't suit everyone, but Bande A Part offers moments so joyful, if not for the characters then for anyone who takes pleasure in a lively imagination at work, that you might want to make time for a film that's in no hurry, one that aims only to tell a simple story about three young people at odds with each other and themselves.

Catherine the Great

Scarlet Empress an overlooked gem of classic cinema

by Scott SHARPLIN

Review

The Scarlet Empress
Starring Marlene Dietrich
Directed by Josef von Sternberg
Criterion Collection DVD

Early in The Scarlet Empress, there is a astonishing montage depicting acts of torture and cruelty, as carried out by various czars of Russia upon their hapless serfs. What makes it so remarkable, aside from the fact that one doesn't expect such blatant violence in a 1934 Hollywood film, is that the litany of torments is a history lesson, being taught to a wide-eyed little girl.

This juxtaposition of sadism and sensuality is at the heart of The Scarlet Empress, an overlooked gem of classic cinema and one of Dietrich's most mesmerizing performances. It is based (loosely, no doubt) upon the diaries of Catherine II of Russia, who was born Sophia Frederica, the princess of an obscure, backwater province, but whom history dubbed Catherine the Great.

Dietrich's own biography is not dissimilar. After appearing in silent films in Germany for several years, Dietrich was cast as the lead in The Blue Angel (1930) by director Josef von Sternberg. In Dietrich, von Sternberg knew he had found both a muse and a meal ticket, and he persuaded her to come to Hollywood with him, to break into the big time. Von Sternberg has already received mixed success with Underworld (1927), a seminal gangster film; but it was the six films he made with Dietrich that secured his name in the annals of cinema history.

If you've never seen a Marlene Dietrich movie, there's no way to describe her presence on screen. Certainly, no modern-day actresses have the ability to romance the camera the way she did. It certainly helped that the camera was being operated by von Sternberg, who was, by 1934, more obsessed with Dietrich than any of her audiences. Incidentally, von Sternberg also edited his own films, giving Dietrich the longest close-ups; and he designed the lighting as well, giving Dietrich what has to be the most flattering lighting effects in film.

Amazingly enough, The Scarlet Empress contains another remarkable element that actually competes with Dietrich's face for your attention. The sets, designed by Hans Dreier, are arresting and surreal. The imperial palace, wherein the bulk of the story unfolds, is a cavernous space, inhabited by grotesque statues with expressions of suffering, clutching oversized candles at unnatural angles. The Empress' throne is a two-headed gryphon with outstretched wings, easily thirty feet wide. It is a haunted, tormented, treacherous environment, quite unlike anything committed to celluloid before or after.

In the midst of this, Dietrich struts her stuff, seducing princes and soldiers alike, eliciting the viewers' sympathies not through any moralistic character traits, but through modulated sexual magnetism and a brash sense of humour The Criterion DVD's lush restoration gives you an all-access pass to Dietrich's Scarlet Empress, and to the phantasmagoric world she inhabits. Don't miss out.

Amélie Gorgeous Audrey Tautou stars in this playful, zippy comedy by Jean-Pierre Jeunet (Delicatessen, Alien Resurrection). She plays a shy woman who michievously dabbles in the lives of others. Embedded in the beautifully visualized and photographed tale is a sweet little love story. It may not be a movie of great depth, but the perpetual delights offered are enough to sustain you right to the final credits. (SL) ★★★★

Behind Enemy Lines You might mistake it for a real action movie, but no one could accidentally make a movie this trite, hollow, contrived and jingoistic. Therefore this must be a clever parody of action movies, and a rather dark comedy at that, given its use of the attempted genocide in Bosnia for background colour. Owen Wilson and Gene Hackman masterfully rehash the oldest dialogue in the book as a hotshot Navy pilot and hard-ass admiral, respectively, who bring peace and justice to war-torn Bosnia as only Americans can. Of course, there's a chance it's every bit as crass, jingoistic and stupid as it appears. To be safe: ★ (SL)

Black Knight Martin Lawrence fans must be very pleased indeed — the comedian is in almost every frame of this time-travel comedy where a jive-talking theme park employee gets shipped back to the Middle Ages. Those of us who aren't Martin Lawrence fans will likely wonder what's so funny. Lawrence's patented mugging and motormouthing are fine and good, but no one else in the movie is given a single funny thing to say or do. And there are distinct limits to the appeal of Lawrence's shtick. The king in the film says it best: "You've got to admire his commitment. He persists even when the joke is no longer funny." ★★ (SL)

Bones Snoop Dogg revives the blaxploitation horror flick in the tale of a legendary pimp named Jimmy Bones who returns from the grave to avenge his murder and clean up his 'hood while he's at it. The point of his bloody rampage is rather obscured by his peripheral slaughter of teens and other bystanders and the whole thing is wrapped in cliched horror movie effects and dry, cool one-liners that start to wear a brother down after about an hour. ★★ (AH)

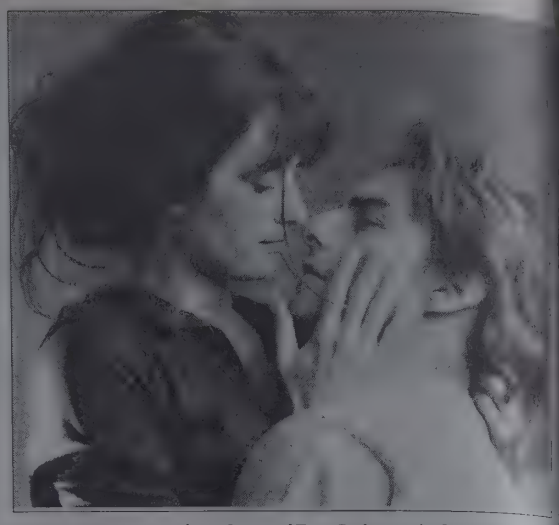
Domestic Disturbance The John Travolta renaissance is over. We were all pretty taken aback by his "comeback" role in Pulp Fiction but, really people, what has he done for us lately? Swordfish, Lucky Numbers, The General's Daughter and now this. Travolta plays a divorced dad whose troubled kid reports more than the usual problems with his new stepfather (Vince Vaughn). For a thriller, it's remarkably lean on thrills, or anything else to recommend it. Maybe Travolta can prepare for his next scheduled comeback in 2011 by dropping off the silver screen for a little while. ★ (RS)

From Hell In adapting Alan Moore and Eddie Campbell's graphic novel to the big screen, the Hughes Brothers (Menace II Society, Dead Presidents) glom onto their preoccupations — prostitution, ghetto crime, desperate living — and more or less lose all the nuances and subtext of the source material. Johnny Depp sounds like Nigel Tufnel as a psychic police inspector on Jack the Ripper's trail, Heather Graham is the improbably gorgeous prostitute for whom he's falling and the rest of upper class England is conspiring to hide a deadly secret. It's as entertaining as you could want genital mutilation to be, but there's not much going on under the slick veneer of gore. ★★★ (SL)

Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone No two ways about it, this is a great kids' movie filled with magic and owls. The story of a boy off to his first year of wizard school is creepy and funny and enjoyable. But those of us not under Harry's global thrall can't help notice that it's a touch long and that, exciting as Harry is, he doesn't seem to grow much through the course of his adventures. The filmmakers have the magic nailed, but they don't convey much of the wonder of being a boy on the verge of discovering a new and secret world. ★★★ (SL)

Heist A routine caper flick gets fancy new togs as revered playwright/director David Mamet takes a crack at a genre flick. Gene Hackman is an aging thief forced into one last score by a duplicitous backer (Danny Devito). The plot is ridiculously saturated with twists and double-crosses, but Mamet's idiosyncratic dialogue keeps the entertainment quotient high, and the actors seem to be having a ball. The final unlikely twist takes a long time to come, but listening to the banter along the way makes the trip worthwhile. ★★★ (RS)

Himalaya Director Eric Valli, a National Geographic photographer who has lived in Tibet for two decades, delivers the most honest, respectful movie yet set against the harsh backdrop of the Himalayas. Valli manages to accommodate an adventure story premise, gorgeous photography and an understanding of Tibetan culture and religious practice in the same film without westernizing it to make it all palatable. Plus it's exciting to watch. ★★★★ (JK)



CRUZ CONTROL Penelope Cruz and Tom Cruise star in Cameron Crowe's Vanilla Sky, opening this week. Check listings for showtimes.

K-PAX Another wise-fool movie falls to Earth in the guise of the story of an inmate at a mental hospital who may or may not be from outer space but is definitely bemused by us humans and our peculiar ways. Kevin Spacey gnaws the scenery as Prot, who hails from the titular planet and has much to teach us. Jeff Bridges is reliably good as the doctor who wants to get to the bottom of Prot's pathology. Director Iain Softley gives the film an amazing look but can't overcome the self-righteous script and its cute-and-cuddly take on mental illness. E.T. go home. ★★ (MS)

Life as a House I hope they discover a cure for cancer soon so I don't have to sit through anymore movies about people getting perspective on their lives with a little help from the Big C. Kevin Kline is reliably charming as a guy who wants to renovate his house and his relationship with his estranged drug addict son over one magical, cancer-ridden summer. Nice to look at but painfully predictable from its earliest frames, Life as a House is standard manipulative Hollywood guff. You'd probably enjoy staying at your house more than visiting this one. ★ (FG)

The Man Who Wasn't There Movie lovers should know by now that the answer to the question, "Are the Coen brothers pulling my leg?" is invariably yes. But the fact that they do it with such style, craft and humour stands them in good stead once again with The Man Who Wasn't There, a quasi-noir starring Billy Bob Thornton as a taciturn barber with a one-way ticket to Palookaville. Critics agonize over whether this is just a well-made trifle completely lacking the heft of art, but the gorgeous black and white photography, terrific performances and controlled corkscrew plot go a long way to making you not care. ★★★★ (SL)

Novocaine A shoddy, pointless vehicle for Steve Martin, who plays a dentist caught up in a noir-style intrigue when he gives in to temptation with a lovely but strung-out patient (Helena Bonham Carter). The predictable plot and attempts at injecting profundity where none exists are as obvious as the boom mike dropping into shot and the cameraman's reflection in the shower door. Great credit sequence and poster, though. ★★ (MS)

The One Sure it's a Matrix rip-off but is it a good Matrix rip-off? Uh, no. As is the case with so many action flicks, the good parts are all divulged in the trailer and the rest of the [illegible] rather than building on the premise of a series of parallel universes and an evil Jet Li killing off his alternate selves to steal their power, is filler. Your ticket gets you lame banter, quasi-science fiction that a six-year-old could poke holes in and the action set-pieces you've already seen on TV. It's your $12. ★★ (SN)

The Others In an age of filmmaking dominated by digital effects, clichéd storytelling, and editing for the attention-deficient, making your Hollywood debut with an old-fashioned ghost story requires you to be either mad or brilliant. Director Alejandro Amenábar is the later. This story of a family trapped in a house on an island has a rare, haunting resonance that grips the spine and raises the hairs on the back of the neck. ★★★★★(DA)

Riding in Cars with Boys Drew Barrymore takes a step into greater maturity, playing a girl with dreams who's forced to postpone them when she gets pregnant at 15. Her struggle to accept her responsibilities while pursuing her own fulfilment would make for stimulating viewing if not for the hack direction of Penny Marshall, who tries to play the rather depressing story for yucks. Nonetheless, Barrymore and Steve Zahn do their best with what they have, and Barrymore in particular captures some of the spirit of a woman railing against her circumstances. ★★★ (JR)

Serendipity Fate obscures, then unites the fortunes of a couple (likable John Cusack and beautiful Kate Beckinsdale) who may or may not be destined to be together. Not much of Serendipity makes sense, and there's precious little resembling the lives, hopes and feelings of real flesh and blood people. On the other hand it's not without its touching moments and you could probably do with having your brain shut off for a couple of hours after the month you've had. Don't blame you. ★★★ (FG)

Shaking off the rust

Okay, snow's on the hills and it's time to get up there. Let's assume that you've done your fall homework and actually gotten your ass off the barstool and worked out a little. So now you're in shape for skiing and boarding, but you're rusty. Hey, the last time you strapped anything to your feet was back in March, so we'll cut you some slack.

First thing to remember: your feet are at the bottom of your ankles. Look down. See anything familiar? Good.

Next step: find your waist. It should be somewhere between your gonads and your bellybutton. This is an important part of your body because when you're racing down a hill, everything above it should be pretty motionless. Your legs (they're below the waist) do most of the work. If your upper body is flapping around like a sweater on a clothesline, you're gonna end up face-first in the snow.

Here are a few things to remember on your first run of the new season. As you stand at the top of the hill (make sure you're on a really easy hill for starters), pick the most direct path to the bottom. That's your line. Follow it. Remember to keep your knees slightly bent for balance and shock absorption and keep your upper body relaxed and relatively still. By the time you hit the bottom, you'll forget you've just returned from seven months off.

Chile reception

Los Andes well worth the long trip south

by Gilbert A. BOUCHARD

Ray doesn't like driving down 99 Street. He claims it's like those old Flintstone cartoons: an endless loop of identical strip malls and mini industrial parks. Usually I agree with him, but tonight the gods smiled and we found Los Andes Restaurant with hardly any fuss. Good thing too, because we put off supper way too long and we're cranky.

Yet, this burst of ill-temper dissolves almost as soon as we take out seats (well, the glass of Chilean Sunrise Chardonnay helped too).

While not the fanciest room I've eaten in this month, it's the space with the best vibe. Los Andes manages to be intimate despite the high ceiling (fitting given its industrial park home) boasting a fun, kitschy mock adobe paint job and loads of flag banners, maps and pictures of Chile. Not to mention the TV blaring Hispanic MTV over the funky fake fireplace which conspire to hypnotize me for the balance of the evening.

As if we'd expect anything different, the menu proves to be as friendly and unpretentious as the decor. Not to mention that all the food is home-style and cooked from scratch. Just what this Scooby Review Gang member wants to hear!!

While kinda heavy on the meat dishes, the menu is quite reasonable (entrees range from a little under $6 for sandwiches to about $15 for the priciest item, which means we escape our three course meal with vino for only $60) and is pretty varied with something for everybody.

For starters we opt for the Camarones al Ajillo and the Arrollado de Malaya, both of which come to the table in an enviable speed.

The Camarones al Ajillo is this beautiful half-shell filled with plump little tiger shrimps swimming about in a bracing garlic/butter sauce! What a spicy little hunk of pure joy this dish is, arriving (like all our dishes did) with the tastiest little flat bread. You know, I'd walk down 99th to eat that bread again.

The Arrollado de Malaya was also a total delight culinary frisson with a proviso. The dish consists of tasty little chunks of pork rolled with hard egg and carrot in a pork belly which is then thinly sliced before being served. An acquired taste for sure, but mighty fine and I'd recommend it in a second (when they said home-style they meant it, pork innards and all).

We decide to go as broad as we can for our entrees: Ray goes for a fish dish (Corvina Negra) while I go for the Garbanzos con Longanizas (your basic sausage with a garbanzo bean side).

This should come as no surprise given the raves I've piled on so far, but the entrees were as stunning as the previous course.

For example, if you're not a sausage fan when your walk into the joint, you'll leave one [illegible] ing the Garbanzos con Lon[illegible] What a decadent taste expe[illegible] rich, spicy (you can taste t[illegible] pery-garlicy goodness) a[illegible] without being overpowe[illegible] strong or too greasy. Eclectic

Paris Market 10363-104 St., Edmonton, 424-2511: Tucked away behind antiques and objects d'art, the Paris Market's Café Les Muses delivers a civilized mix of classic French and regional Canuck cuisine in a casual, take-out-friendly atmosphere. The home-made New York Soda is a definite must-nosh. Overall Rating: ★★★★

East Side Mario's 2104-99 St., Edmonton: You shouldn't let its grim South Edmonton Common surroundings and over-kitschy dining room blind you to the subtle-enough charms of this energetic franchise. Way adept take on Italian cuisine and way slick service. Overall Rating: ★★★★

Il Forno Ristorante 14981 Stony Plain Rd., Edmonton, 455-0443: If you visit this ever-popular eatery — famous for its oven-baked pizzas in its newish west-end, street-front strip-mall location — go early. You may wait for a table, but a well-done meal here is worth the effort. Overall Rating: ★★★★

Café Select 10018-106 St., Edmonton, 423-0419: Reviewing Café Select is like reviewing Shakespeare: what can you say about a classic? This cosy, homage-Renaissance room is all about balancing mood, service and deft cuisine to add up to a delightful evening out. Overall Rating: ★★★★

Rigoletto's Mayfair Hotel Building on 108 St., Edmonton: The Verdi opera it's named after is kinda grim, but you'll never use that adjective after a visit to the ever-popular Rigoletto's. You gotta love their two-fisted take on pasta and their strong lunch menu: Overall Rating: ★★★

Sorrentino's in the Varscona Hotel, Edmonton, 434-7607: I don't know if I go to the Varscona Sorrentino's more for the brilliant food (a swell take on Continental/Italian offerings) or the decadently relaxing decor. All I can say for sure is that I keep going back. Overall Rating: ★★★★

Fast Food (Sit-Down)

Pharos Pizza, Corner of 109 Street and 87 Ave., 433-5205 – I'm not going to commit the huge faux pas of saying that Pharos is the best pizza in town (my god, that's like choosing a favourite among your children), but will state that it's certainly in my personal top 10. The joint also has that retro-diner coolness and is perfectly situated beside the Garneau Theatre for pre- or post-show pigging out. Overall rating: ★★★★.

Parkallen Pizza 8424—109 St., Edmonton, 430-4777: Sister outlet to the venerable Parkallen Restaurant, Parkallen Pizza lives up to an enviable family reputation. This, kids, is how pizza should always be offered up: golden perfect; thick and chewy, with really generous, fresh ingredients. Overall Rating: ★★★

White Spot 3921 Calgary Trail South: A B.C. car-hopping tradition comes to Edmonton. Big juicy burgers and well-done fast food staples are specialty, served in a aesthetically-pleasing, family-friendly dining room. Overall rating: ★★★.

Vegetarian/Health

Max's Light Cuisine, 7809-109 St., 432-6241 – This tiny little lunch-box is my vote for the best in Edmonton's vegan cooking. Not the most elegant of rooms, but you'll come back for the fresh, well-prepared healthy food. Overall rating: ★★★.

Café Mosaics, 10844-82 Ave., 433-9702 – The closest thing the Scooby Review Gang has to a hang-out (Pop Tait, where are you). Bright menu with good veggie and vegan options with an accent of fresh ingredients and home-style cooking to compliment the up-to-date offerings. Cooler than cool. Overall rating: ★★★★.

Savoy's Health Café 11010 - 51 Ave., 437-7718 – Don't let the Anglophile name fool you, this Southgate-adjacent diner specializes in some totally decadent Indian food. A little out of the way, but worth the trip. Overall rating: ★★★★.

Oriental Veggie House 10586-100 St.: Okay, the tofu beef kinda freaked me out, but aside from that a spendid dinning experience. Friendly staff, lovingly prepared dishes in a casual store-front setting. Overall rating: ★★★.

Coffee Houses and Pubs

The Overtime Broiler and Taproom Edmonton, 423-1643: While the popular Overtime (a clever hybrid contrasting exposed brick with overstuffed leather chairs) has made a name for itself as a classy drinking hole, don't overlook its dining charms. I just love their brunch. Overall Rating: ★★★

The Druid 11606-Jasper Ave., Edmonton, 454-9928: The Scooby Review Gang loves comfort food, especially Celtic pub offerings served with panache: hence our fondness for The Druid. Gotta love the dark wood panelling, the sedate decor and the kitchen's endless consistency. Overall Rating: ★★★

Fogg 'n Sudds 2100 Premier Way, Sherwood Park: Named after Phineas T. Fogg from Jules Verne's Around the World in 80 Days, this joint promises to put you in orbit with its selection of 135 international bottled beers. Not the most adept kitchen, but good enough. Overall Rating: ★★★

Bagel Tree 10354-82 Ave.: One of the few establishments that is even more cool that Whyte's white-hot buzz. An eatery that does the deli tradition right from its bohemian vibe to the hearty smoked meat sandwiches and home-made desserts and soups. You almost expect to see Leonard Cohen scribbling away in the corner. Overall rating: ★★★★.

International

Khazana Restaurant 10177-107 St., Edmonton, 702-0330: My only advice when you visit this million-dollar dining room is to arrive hungry and graze broadly so as to do justice to the wild assortment of naan breads, appetizers, entrees and signature Tandoori offerings. Overall Rating: ★★★★

Three Muskateers French Creperie 10416-82 Ave., Edmonton, 437-4239: The brainchild of former French fire-fighter/chef Christophe Mathew, this unique Whyte Avenue eatery is designed to give Edmontonians a taste of authentic French cuisine, especially the traditional galette (buckwheat crepe). Always fresh, always a treat. Overall Rating: ★★★★

Sicilian Pasta Kitchen 11239 -Jasper Ave. Edmonton, 488-3838: The ownership may change, the neighbourhood can totally transform itself, but the Sicilian Pasta Kitchen remains a model of an authentic high-quality Italian restaurant. I especially love the intelligent menu and the from-scratch cooking practices. Overall Rating: ★★★★

Tokyo Noodle Shop & Sushi Bar 10736-82 Ave. Edmonton, 430-0838:, modeled on Tokyo's ubiquitous noodle shops (Japanese take on fast-food), this ultra-hip Garneau Lofts restaurant instantly became a Whyte Avenue institution. Super-affordable. Overall Rating: ★★★

Grab A Bite 10351-82 Ave., Edmonton, 433-6336: Can't decide what kind of Asian food you want? Whyte Avenue's Grab a Bite's for you then, serving up food from four of the big Asian cuisines. Love the Bento boxes and the laid-back atmosphere. Overall Rating: ★★★

Yianni's Taverna Restaurant 10444 82 Ave., Edmonton: A River City restaurant staple dating back to the Reagan era. Great Greek food in an elegant setting that's conducive to a plate-breaking good time. You also can't miss Yianni's Las Vegas-sized signage. Overall Rating: ★★★★

Sahara Sands 8120 - 101 St., Edmonton. Albeit a bit on the kitschy side, with service leaning toward spotty, Sahara Sands is still a pretty delightful take on Middle Eastern/North African cooking. Overall Rating: ★★★

Julio's Barrio Bourbon Street West Edmonton Mall, Edmonton: Carrying the torch of the Whyte Avenue icon in the mall that ate West Edmonton, the son of Julio's offers the same accessible take on Red Ribbon-adept Mexican cooking in a legitimately funky [illegible] room. Overall Rating: ★★★★

Symposium Whyte Avenue 10439 - 82 Ave., Edmonton, 433-7912: You can never get enough Greek food especially when it's this good. Named after the Greek word for party, this restaurant lives up to its name with a cool postmodern-influenced open design and mucho sharing-friendly dishes. Overall Rating: ★★★

Lemongrass Café, 10417-51 Ave., 413-0088 – A cozy modernist store-front eatery, The Lemongrass Café offers up a broad Vietnamese menu with a definite western sensibility in service and presentation. Case in point: the hybrid Wrap and Roll Combo Platter and Mango Mousse Cake we enjoyed when we last visited Tasty and with a complimentary side-order of classy! Overall rating: ★★★. [illegible] shared. Overall rating: ★★★.

Brunch & Breakfast Favourites

Twig 'n' Berries, 8430-103 St., 413-6289 – It's tiny, it keeps strange hours, but it's a hidden gem. Everything's comfortably home-style, made from scratch and you'll be hard pressed to get friendlier service A great place to unwind after a Saturday morning at the Farmer's Market. Overall rating: ★★★.

High Level Diner, 10912-88 Ave., 433-0993 – An excellent overall restaurant. I just love the High Level's brunch and breakfasts. From super-decadent to totally healthy the offerings at this Edmonton eating-out-institution are always top-notch and served with an enviable panache. Go early on weekends though. Overall rating: ★★★★.

Sweetwater Café 12427-102 Ave.: Still haven't forgiven this restaurant's move from Whyte Avenue. Love the weekend brunch: huge portions and the whole wheat pancakes are to die for. Overall rating: ★★★.

Café de Ville 124 Street just off Jasper, 488-9188 – Despite the fact that I've had some way-above-average dinners in this super-classy Edwardian-era dining room the brunch is to totally die for. From the piping-hot selection of just baked buns and muffins to hefty entrees that should have the decadence cops smashing down the door. Overall: ★★★★★.

Albert's Family Restaurant 10370-82 Ave., 439-6609 – It's been here for [illegible] that 30 years and spawned a chain, not to mention nursed many a Whyte avenue hang-over. Hearty basic breakfasts that won't break your budget and a people-watcher's paradise given the room's wildly eclectic clientele. Overall rating: ★★★.

Shallow Hal Allegedly a feel-good comedy with important lessons for us all about seeing people's inner beauty, the latest Farrelly brothers' movie is tainted with its own rather ugly assumptions about human value based on looks, the greatest of which is that overweight people are intrinsically unattractive but that shouldn't get in our way of feeling sorry for them. Assumptions aside, Shallow Hal isn't terribly funny, and becomes even less so as it wears on, and its finger-wagging becomes more vigorous. It's a tribute to Gwyneth Paltrow's talents that she salvages a bit of dignity for a character the film simultaneously humiliates and pities — let's hope she gets a shot at doing a comedy soon. ★★ (SL)

Sidewalks of New York A slight, slightly entertaining comedy from writer-director-actor Ed Burns follows the romantic travails of a gaggle of loosely connected New Yorkers. Burns owes more than a small stylistic debt to Woody Allen but has borrowed little of his intelligence, resulting in a few laughs but not much that sticks in the mind afterwards, and certainly nothing in the way of insight. The ensemble cast seems to be enjoying themselves. ★★1/2 (SL)

Spy Game Director Tony Scott (Enemy of the State) has a lot of experience injecting thrills into action premises, but give him a little dialogue to work with and he's stumped. He squanders the assets he has in leads Robert Redford and Brad Pitt and makes this serviceable spy yarn leadfooted. Still, it's always a treat to see someone like Redford do what they do so well. ★★1/2 (JL)

The Taste of Others Subtle French comedy plays on class distinctions and social perceptions to deliver a surprisingly engaging film. A boorish businessman is attracted to a noble stage actress who makes ends meet as an English tutor. The businessman's bodyguards also become romantically involved. The story unfolds a touch slowly, but the clever details and understated performances completely subvert our initial impression of the characters and the relationships between them. ★★1/2 (SL)

Training Day Denzel Washington turns in a terrifying performance as Alonso, a cop with an image as big as his Mercedes Cadillac who deals narcotics on the mean streets of Los Angeles. Hawke is the naive rookie who has to survive his first day on the job with the increasingly dangerous Alonso. The film is admirable for giving complexity to the power relationships and lines of corruption and criminal behavior, and finds a way to both denounce and approve of "street justice" underlining its undeniably exhilarating volition. ★★★1/2 (SL)

Zoolander Perhaps tired of his lukewarm reception at the box office, Ben Stiller pitches one to the lowest common denominator — the TV watching public — and mounts himself a cheap and fairly mean-spirited out of a five-minute sketch. The title character is a dense male model manipulated by the fashion industry into assassinating the anti-sweat shop Malaysian prime minister. Stiller's starring performance is relentlessly one-note, but Owen Wilson scores some laughs as Zoolander's runway rival Hansel. Overall, the laughs are too slack, the jokes aren't funny enough and Derek Zoolander should stick to TV where he belongs. ★★ (SL)

Stocking stiffers

Gift ideas for that really hard person on your list

Yeah, okay, so Martha Stewart knows how to make Abraham Lincoln's log cabin out of pretzels, crackers and peanut butter, but can she make a labia stretcher out of a few potato chip bag clips? From knitting to decoupage, everyone's getting crafty these days, so this year, I'm offering some cheap, creative holiday gift ideas that would make Martha blush.

For the single guy on your list, how about an Artificial Pussy?

Remove the lid and bottom of an empty soup can (or similarly sized can), and insert a white tube sock, folding the open part back over the rim of the can. Repeat using two or three socks — slide your fingers in to test snugness. Shove a plastic bag inside as a liner, and fold the open end over the top of the can as well. Secure with elastics. Pour in some warmed baby oil or lube and he's in business. When he's, um, done, he just chucks plastic bag, and replaces it with a clean one for next time.

For extra fun, he can use a pillow to elevate it to the proper pussy level or wrap a heating pad around your fake pussy to further simulate the real thing.

Cost: less than $5, or zilch if you've already got this shit lying around the house.

For her, try a Bubblewrap Dildo.

Cut bubble wrap (you can buy it at most stationary stores) into an 8 by 10-inch rectangle. Roll lengthwise with the bubbles on the outside. Slip a condom over the entire roll, secure it with tape, and voila, you now have a resilient disposable dildo. Tell her to practice her Kegels by trying to pop the bubbles.

Cost: If you're smart, you've saved some bubble wrap and have condoms already. Otherwise, you'll have to shell out a couple of bucks for supplies.

Here's a great idea for a cheap and funky Strap-on Harness. Get a pair of your tightest and sexiest 501s, and just pop a dildo (one with a flared end) between the buttons. Use a scruffy pair and on Christmas morning she can play Santa's fix-it guy who's just dropped by to check your pipes. If you want more freedom and movement, turn the 501s into cutoffs. Just make sure they're still tight enough to hold the dildo in place.

Cost: You'll need to shell out for a dildo with a flared base — there are several models available at www.joytoyz.ca — or adapt the end of the bubble wrap dildo with duct tape for mere pennies.

As for the potato chip bag clip labia stretcher, it's a little too complicated to explain here. If you like that kind of thing, get yourself a copy of the book I took these ideas from, Kinky Crafts: 99 Do-It-Yourself S/M Toys for the Kinky Handyperson (Greenery Press). It has great crafty ideas for everything from canes and whips to bondage boards.

You can also find ideas for cheap BDSM supplies at http://cuffs.com/kinkylinks/toy_making_santas_elfs/

Here's a super simple and cheap idea for a sex toy for him: Kids' air wings. Lube 'em up and off he goes.

Cost: Free if you know any kids who have outgrown theirs. Otherwise, try the dollar store.

According An Apple Harvest by Frank Browning and Sharon Silva, "Pharmacists in ancient Persia offered the following as an aphrodisiac for women: nine apple seeds ground together with whiskers from a man who had been brutally killed, a few grains of barley retrieved from a grave, the blood of a worm, of a black dog and of the second finger of the left hand, mixed with semen and stirred into a glass of wine."

This might be a little tough to pull together before Christmas but you can concoct sexy Massage Lotions for cheap.

'A study a couple years back found pumpkin pie and lavender increased blood flow to men's penises.'

Put eight drops of sandalwood-infused essential oil in a half cup of almond oil. Hindu lore states that sandalwood triggers sexual arousal.

Or mix 20 drops of lavender into eight ounces of unscented lotion.

Serve up this one with a nice massage and some pumpkin pie. (In a study a couple years back, the Smell & Taste Treatment and Research Foundation in Chicago found pumpkin pie and lavender increased blood flow to men's penises by as much as 40 per cent.)

Cost: Under $20. The oils are available at health stores and unscented lotion from the drugstore.

Check out the links to sites with aphrodisiac recipes at http://www.gourmetsleuth.com/recipes_aphro.asp for more sexy food and drink ideas.

Make an Erogenous Zone Game. Find a sexy shot of your sweetheart or use an image of a hot body and stick your partner's head on it. Glue the image to a square piece of cardboard. Make a cardboard arrow and stick it into the centre with one of those copper butterfly thingies that make it so you can spin the arrow. Buy sticky dots and dice from the dollar store. Tell your partner to stick the dots on the image wherever they'd like you to get busy. Spin the arrow and throw the dice to determine how many minutes you must spend on the selected spot.

For him or her, how about some Homemade Smut? Buy some nice Japanese paper, or hell, just cut up brown paper grocery bags into "pages" and glue sparkles to them. Write a hot story. If the creative juices aren't flowing, copy one you like, print it up in a nice swirly font and glue it to the pages.

Tie the pages together with nice ribbon and toss a hot Polaroid of yourself (or, staying creative here, a picture of your partner's fave hottie with your head superimposed) on the cover.

Combine this with some homemade massage oil, make your sweetie a sexy meal and you've got a gift that keeps on giving.

Cost: Under $5 for paper, ribbon and sparkles.

Just like a man

Dan's distinction between 'violated' and 'assaulted' gets blood boiling

Your response to New York City Girl was INSENSITIVE. There is no longer any question that you are a MAN! I was raped (with a dildo) by a female lover. I was hurt and angry but I gave in and forgave her. Needless to say the abuse continued throughout our time together. While NYCG wasn't penetrated, I'm sure she was scared and confused. She definitely should see a shrink and maybe join a support group.

A Woman Who Knows

Was there some question about my gender before my response to NYCG appeared in the column? And didn't I tell NYCG — the girl who got naked and crawled into bed with an ex-boyfriend who proceeded to ignore her growing discomfort, ignore the word "no," and come all over her stomach — to see a shrink?

As for the charge of insensitivity, AWWK, there's at least one person out there disagrees with you: "Thanks, Dan, you were very sensitive," NYCG wrote me after reading my response. "What you said made sense and is helpful. I will get help. Sorry the letter was so serious, but I needed an outside opinion. I'll keep on reading."

In NYCG's case, I don't see why you needed to discuss rape at all; she didn't ask you that question. She said she was, "23 and confused," and asked, "What am I to think?" She didn't ask if she was raped.

No One Thinks She Was Raped

I brought up the subject of rape because it seemed to me that NYCG was dancing around the word. I also knew that many readers would consider what happened to NYCG rape, and that these readers would attempt to hand me my ass if I didn't tell NYCG that she was raped. And so they are:

A man who ejaculates on a woman's after she asks him to stop is a rapist. A man who touches another man at a sex club is a rapist. Pornographers are proxy rapists. Corporations are economic rapists. Advertisers are mental rapists. Your narrow definition of rape heaps condemnation on certain types of rape while excusing others.

Zena

I'm tempted to point out that your expansive definition of rape dilutes the horror of real rape — but I'm not gonna bother. You see, I've been locked in a hotel room for three weeks, trying to finish a book (writing, not reading), and consequently I've been watching a lot of Judge Judy. When some idiot goes off in her courtroom, Judge Judy waves him away. Since this is my courtroom, Zena, and since you're an idiot, I'm just gonna wave your idiotic ass away.

Hey, what kind of rapist does that make me?

SHUT THE FUCK UP, DAN!

Rape can be rape in hindsight because rapists can drug, manipulate and confuse the women they are assailing. What happened to the girl was classic date rape — and you tried to make her feel like an opportunistic whore, you son of a bitch! If you have any balls, Dan, you will print the following message:

I'm so sorry this happened to you, NYCG. Now let me break some things down for you: 1) What happened with Ron was date rape. 2) The only thing the big Dan-the-ASSHOLE was right about is seeing a therapist. 3) What Ron did is criminal. 4) You are not to blame.

Print that, Dan, you stupid asshole fuck.

Detests Idiot Shithead Savage

It's been established that I'm male, DISS, and now to prove it I have to run your letter? Lord, I feel like my gender-identity is under siege. Anyway, here's your letter, DISS. Now where are your meds?

Why are Americans are so quick to apply the words "sexual assault" or "rape" to any unpleasant sexual experience? In Europe we use these words when a man forces himself on a woman or penetrates her against her will. It diminishes these words to use them for misunderstandings and unwanted sexual advances. As much as I feel sorry for NYCG (I've been through that kind of heartbreak), sperm on her belly is not the reason she's hurt. She's hurt because she was hoping to reunite. She needs to address the issue that is actually bothering her.

Euro Girl

Thanks for sharing, EG.

When I was 15, a cool boy invited me to his house. We smoked a poorly rolled joint. Then he asked if I wanted a massage. I had some idea what was coming. Five minutes later, I wasn't a virgin anymore. He didn't kiss me or touch me beyond the crappy massage and I wasn't physically ready. I felt like shit, I felt violated, and for a long time I felt like I had been raped. Then when I was 19, two strangers beat the shit out of me and really raped me. Let me tell you, when it happens you know it. It was violent, ugly, and completely unambiguous.

Like NYCG, I'm 23 years-old now. I'm also doing well in the sex and self-respect departments, thanks. But when I read her letter, I thought, "BOO-FUCKING-HOO!" If that's her sad story, she's pretty lucky.

Fully Recovered

Thanks for sharing, FR.

You have no idea what it feels like to be a woman. You weren't taught to be passive and nice and intimidated by men. That's why rape is not black and white. It can happen without a woman knowing it happened, and it can happen because a woman is incapable of withholding her consent. It can happen to a guy who thinks he's going to get a blowjob but ends up getting fucked (by a girl) when that wasn't what he wanted. A guy can rape without knowing it if the girl wasn't "clear enough" or too scared to say no.

You're Not A Woman

Yes, yes, yes: I am not a woman. That's been established. But as a gay man I do have some idea what it's like to be in sexual situations with bigger, stronger men. One of my first boyfriends was 6'5", 240 pounds, all muscle, and a complete psycho. He was quick to anger and I found him very intimidating. But I reject the idea that succumbing to his pressure (and his charms, which were intertwined) means I was raped.

'I reject the idea that succumbing to his pressure (and his charms, which were intertwined) means I was raped.'

Call me insensitive, YNAW, but I agree with FR: Rape, when it happens, is pretty unambiguous. (Unless the victim has been drugged.) What's more, ridiculous claims like yours don't help anyone take rape — date or stranger — more seriously. Your rape scenarios are absurd. If regret or getting swept up in the moment and giving verbal or non-verbal consent to something you didn't plan on (or didn't enjoy) is rape, well, then we're all rape victims and rapists.

I don't know about you, YNAW, but I couldn't look FR in the eye and tell her that I'm a rape victim too because I gave a few blowjobs to my big and scary ex-boyfriend when I didn't feel like it. And if I did say something that stupid and insensitive to FR, a woman who was really and truly and unambiguously raped, I hope she would do the favour of slapping my face so hard my cheek came off in her hand.
